The first of Sir Charles's duties, as finance minister, if he consults the public opinion of India, is negative—he should not pay off debt. We are not of those who think it wise to borrow more money at present for public works, at a time when our cash balances are so high, our revenue is increasing at so rapid a rate, and our finances are so complicated by railway loans. But still greater is the mistake made by some of the leading authorities in England, who would pay off at least the whole of the Indian Debenture Debt as it falls due. This year the sum of £4,800,000 will mature. No less than £14,041,000 is held as Debenture Debt in England. Sinking funds, like Pitt's, are all very well for a country like England, which has a debt enormously disproportioned to its income. But at the very worst the debt of India is only two and a-half times its revenue, and that revenue grows every year. The debt is so high in public estimation, that to pay it off would be far from popular with any class; while its political value in attaching India to England and England to India is inestimable. The financier who would pay off one pound of this debt would act as foolishly as if he lent money at three per cent. and borrowed at five. It is no secret that the Indian Council has for some time been discussing this question, and that the balance of opinion inclines to an expenditure of the surplus cash balances, as we recently recommended, on feeders and branches to the trunk railways. We trust Sir Charles Trevelyan will lend his influence to the consolidation of the debenture debt and the expenditure of all surplus on public works. Another danger which he would do well to avoid is the reduction of official salaries. It is believed that to some such step he is pledged. The sooner he disabuses the public mind of this the better for his own comfort and usefulness. We, who have throughout supported the Military and Civil Finance Commissions in their economy, express the deliberate opinion that, as a rule, officials in India, native and English, are underpaid. The rise of prices, and in general the greatly increased cost of living in India since 1857, have made salaries just one-third less than they were. A useless and expensive establishment like the Bengal Board of Revenue may be abolished by entrusting its duties to the Commissioners, but any such gain as this will be in itself trifling, and be far from meeting the extra expenditure required by a redistribution of work.

And this brings us to what will probably be among the first of Sir Charles Trevelyan's duties,—an assimilation of the salaries of officials holding similar offices in the different provinces and presidencies. Mr. Ricketts did something towards this, but the work must be begun anew. Grievous, for instance, is the injustice which promotes boys not four years out of college to be magistrates or junior secretaries on Rs. 1,500 and Rs. 2,000 a month in Bengal, while men, their superiors in service and ability, draw half their pay as assistants in the Punjab, and have no hope of promotion for years. Why should the Small Cause Judge of Jessore receive Rs. 1,500 a month, and his seniors in service in a similar position at Lahore and Hooshiarpore receive only Rs. 1,000 or even Rs. 750? Mere luck will not account for this, and if Government will regularise the outlying provinces it is bound to pay all officials of the same grade similar salaries. No difference should be allowed except that of personal grants to men who live in the Presidency cities, or in one Presidency where the cost of living is considerably greater than in another. Another task before the new minister is an honest inquiry into the Public Works Department. There is a sphere for his surplus energy. Major Chesney may have done much to correct some abuses, but the department has not yet been laid bare, like the armies of the three Presidencies and the civil offices of Northern India. That is now, and will continue to be for years, the most important department in India, and it becomes tax-payers to look to it. Lord Dalhousie began the work. Lord Canning left it untouched, because Colonel Balfour started back from it affrighted. Connected with this question of public works is railways. The present system of double control cannot be suffered to continue unimproved. Under inexperienced military engineers plunder has run riot on most of the lines, so that they have cost almost double what they ought. Colonel Beadle did a little to check the evil for a time, but the system is bad, and the public are sacrificed to disagreement between the railway and the Government authorities.

When Sir Charles Trevelyan enquires into the Financial Department and the Board of Revenue he will probably be led to see the necessity of a well-equipped statistical branch, such as Mr. Laing contemplated and the Statistical Committee, whose report is ready, have laid the basis of. This will form the nucleus of a Board of Trade which, united with the Customs under the new Bill, might discharge the strictly imperial duties now provided for so inefficiently by the Board of Revenue. We trust, too, the position of the Opium revenue on this side of India will early come under the new minister's eye, and that he will at once free the national conscience from that stain, improve the condition of the ryots, and add to the stability of our revenue, by introducing the Bombay plan into Bengal. As more purely financial duties there are the substitution of local taxation controlled by the local legislatures for the income-tax, and the management of the currency. Sir Charles Trevelyan, like his predecessor, is pledged to the introduction of gold as a circulating medium. Besides its intrinsic value, and the facility of its remittance, which recommend it especially to Asiatics, the state of trade caused by the large export of cotton and small import of manufactured goods is a new argument for its introduction as at least a subsidiary to silver, just as in England silver is subsidiary to gold. Thus Manchester would cease to grumble at the East draining Europe of silver, the roundabout purchase of silver by gold in France to remit to India would be diminished, and a supply of the precious metal might flow direct to India from Australia. Subsidiary sovereigns and half-sovereigns would not expose the State to the real difficulty of a double standard, while the price of silver would become less fluctuating. In addition to this we trust Sir Charles Trevelyan will throw off his predecessor's timidity, and invest the whole four millions of cash paid for currency notes in State securities, instead of only a miserable three-quarters of a million. Let banking also be encouraged, and the treasury balances be utilised, from Rangoon to Umritsur.

Of questions not financial the two most important are the Rent Difficulty in Bengal and National Education. The former is still before the courts, but in the course of the year matters will be ripe for legislation to amend Act X. in such a way that land shall be left, like any other commodity, to the ordinary laws of supply and demand, as it was before Act X. was passed. This is a matter which will fall rather within the province of Mr. Maine, but Sir Charles Trevelyan's experience will be useful, and we believe that the question has a peculiar interest for him. That of national education, however, is all his own. We have appealed to Lord Canning and Lord Elgin to carry out Lord Stanley's despatch of 1850, as yet in vain. Sir Charles is not the man he was when a Bengal civilian and the friend of Dr. Duff, when a correspondent of the Times and the friend of the ryot, if he does not wipe out this reproach on our administration and help to teach the peasantry in their own vernaculars. In this he has a clear field for action, a noble sphere to gain a reputation that will link his name with Bentinck's. In this we will forgive him any amount of energy, for the work, so long neglected, demands the labours of a Hercules.—Friend of India.

SANITARIA IN CENTRAL INDIA.

By recent advices from Central India we learn that Sir Hope Grant was about to visit the Mahadewa and the Puckmurre hills, to decide on the most favourable locality for a hill sanitarium in Central India. Mutoor will probably be fixed upon. Nothing could be better than this transition from the unbearable climate of Kamptee to the cooler temperature of Chindwarra or Mutoor. No place could be better as a convalescent depot than either of those two localities. No place would, during the hot months, more thoroughly tend to renew the health of the soldier than a few months' stay at either of them. Only seventy miles from Kamptee, Chindwarra is within three days' easy march of it. Those who were there a year ago, and whose letters are now before us, give us the most favourable idea of the healthiness and peculiar adaptability of this hill station as a sanitarium. The thermometric observations throughout the year give, as the mean of two observations, 35 deg. as the minimum and 80 deg. as the maximum. In the winter, ice is easily procurable; in the summer, the heat is never very great. Throughout the year the days are cool, but during the lunations in June, and during some parts in May, high winds, though seldom hot, are experienced. During the rains the temperature lowers, and the daily variations in the thermometer are considerably less. The solar radiations are never marked, and in the rains there are none of those violent transitions from dryness to humidity, from heat to dampness, which make Kamptee so unhealthy, and which make the rains in other stations so disagreeable.

The one question which at this moment is more interesting than any other is, to find sanatoria for our British soldiers. The question has been repeatedly asked, How is it possible that English soldiers unmarried, with no sphere for activity beyond the routine of parade and barrack life, with idleness thus forced upon them, with no institutes, clubs, or libraries, with strong passions, with nothing literally to do, can be permanently located on the hot plains of India, massed together as they are in large but uncomfortable barracks? Inactivity here results in more evils than those which attend inactivity at home. Amongst masses, disease always has a tendency to lurk. No place is less suited for English soldiers than the neighbourhood of large native towns, than stations with a climate like that of Kamptee or Nagpore.

With so many growing European colonies, with so large a demand of English population, it will be impossible to supply India with fresh recruits in the proportion hitherto supplied. In Hyderabad, Kamptee, Benares, Delhi, Meerut, Lahore, and Umritsur, our troops have had in seasons of quiet painfully to battle against disease and mortality as terrible as that of the battle-field. There are more men who fall victims to cholera, dysentery, and fever than are slain in battle. It is almost as difficult an achievement to maintain an army in peace as to lead it through a succession of victories in war. There would seem to have been a fatality in the selection of stations for the location of British troops. The hottest and often the most disagreeable stations are selected on account of their proximity to large native towns. This is an evil, but it is an evil which even now it is not too late to remedy.

One of the strange anomalies that we find in India is its varied capabilities, and the difference of the climate that we meet with in different parts. Not more than two hundred miles from the marshes of the Soonderbunds and of Calcutta, is the hill station of Darjeeling. The contrast from the pleasant climate of the hill retreats at Simla to the heat at Meerut and Delhi, is scarcely greater than the difference between the Neigherries and Madras. The Shevaroy hills are within easy reach of the Europeans in the Madras Presidency. The Puckmurre hills are of still nearer access to Jubbulpore, while they have scarcely yet been made use of. These hill sanatoria are now drawing attention, and it is a good feature in our administration that men like Sir Hope Grant should give so much of their time to questions of this nature.

When in July, 1861, the town council of Edinburgh met to present General Sir J. Hope Grant with the freedom of the city, honourable mention was made of the care he took of the troops under his command during the China campaign. The interests of the soldier are dear to Sir Hope Grant, and we understand that measures are now in operation for erecting convenient barracks at the stations of Chindwarra and Mutoor.—Times of India.

DURBAR CEREMONIAL AND ENGLISH HONOUR.

In a few days, Mr. Yule, C.B., of the Bengal Civil Service, who did much to civilise the Sonthals, who distinguished himself, though not a military man, in the mutinies, and who proved in Oudh that he possessed the qualifications of a first-class administrator, will present himself as resident at the durbar of our feudatory, the Nizam of Hyderabad. He did not seek the appointment; he is said to dislike it intensely. Like Sir George Couper, he deserved reward, but not reward of such a character. Still duty has ever been his watchword, and he is resident of Hyderabad, at a court where no English gentleman can appear, and yet maintain his self-respect, at a city which no Englishman of any kind can enter unarmed and unprotected by an escort from Salar Jung, in a country where, as in one vast sewer, nearly all the evils of Moslem fanaticism, Arab treachery, Rohilla anarchy, hate to the Christian, and disloyalty to the English, congregate and fester in undisturbed pollution. Only in Delhi, where the Punjab Government dare not trust a Sikh corps lest it be demoralised, and to whose fanatic intrigues Government has presented the Jumma Masjid, which was the property of the late king, can we find a parallel on a small scale to Hyderabad and the Deccan. The Mussulmans of that city, the same who in their correspondence with their brethren in Delhi gloated over the insult they had cast on the late Resident, look to Mr. Yule's first durbar as the occasion which will test the value of their former triumph. Has the Government of India instructed Mr. Yule how he is to act?

We would not again allude to the Star of India Durbar but for an occurrence during the past week. We are not permitted to publish the names of two of the eye-witnesses on whose testimony we based our remarks on that event. But we were personally waited on by the officer who of all others was most intimately associated with the late Resident—Captain Ramsay, who commanded his escort. Wherever the late Resident went, he was accompanied by Captain Ramsay, who was intimately associated with him in his daily life, and frequently remonstrated with him on the humiliating scenes at durbar. Captain Ramsay is clear in all his statements as to the events of that durbar; clear as to the late Resident's position on the floor, to reach which his attitude was that of crawling; clear as to the Nizam's elevated position on his pillows, and evident disgust at the reception of the Star of India; clear as to the Nizam taking the star with his left hand and hastily thrusting it under his seat. We allude to this, not only in justification of our own accuracy, but because the event is likely to form the subject of a question in Parliament, and still more because we would have the Government of India do what all parties are agreed to as to the necessity of—issue a code of rules for durbar ceremonial. Not only have they not yet done so, but the mistake has been made of sending Colonel Phayre, after his diplomatic triumph, back to Mandalay with the ratified treaty, again to submit to the ceremony of shiko, instead of entrusting that duty to Dr. Williams, our new consular agent. In Lord Elgin's own case, as Ambassador to Peking, the task of exchanging ratified copies of the treaty most properly devolved on his brother, who was to act as permanent minister.

In India, as elsewhere, Englishmen keep to their national habit of blundering by degrees into a right course of action. Mistakes are made as in China, disasters arise as in the Crimea, garotting terrifies a capital as at present in London,—but at last the right remedy is adopted. So, in India, Lord Canning blundered into his Adoption policy, which at first he opposed. It was years after the close of the mutiny campaigns before our Government awoke to the fact that Queen Victoria held to the chiefs of India the same relation as Aurungzebe. Then new munuds were given, and the Order of the Star of India was instituted, while the whole machinery of our civil and military administration was imperialised. We have still one step to take—to recognise the fact that all our political agents and residents at native courts, all our envoys to foreign States, are the representatives of Queen Victoria as paramount sovereign, and not of a trading company. If Lord Elgin would not kow-tow at Peking or Yeddo, no more should Colonel Phayre be asked to shiko at Mandalay. If the Viceroy a few weeks hence, when he pays return visits to our feudatories, will not divest himself of his boots, or squat in a crawling position from very physical necessity, before chiefs who exist by the favour of the power he represents, no more should Mr. Yule be expected to do so at Hyderabad. It is not fair to our Residents and Political Agents for the Government of India to leave this responsibility with them. Government called for reports from our political officers six months ago, on the ceremonial at present submitted to by them. With the solitary exception of the Nizam, there is not a feudatory in India who would not be well pleased that so high an authority as the Viceroy should decide in what way her Majesty's representatives will act on occasions of State ceremonial.—Friend of India.

AN INSTANCE OF THE INDIRECT EFFECTS OF OUR RULE.

The vast region lying between Peshawur and Singapore belongs to Queen Victoria. It is an empire of which Alexander had no idea. Our acquisition of it has not been after the hurricane-like manner of the great warriors who have swept over the earth. The courage, perseverance, and tact of Englishmen are testified by the empire itself. The people inhabiting this immense area enjoy peace and independence to an extent which their perpetual subjection to oriental thralldom makes it difficult for them to realise. The direct good worked out by our armies, our statesmen, and our capital, is in itself a wonder. The moral effects of our rule are more so. Each succeeding generation is more Anglicised in the modes of thinking and acting. One fact to which attention has not yet been sufficiently directed is the ever increasing and insatiable desire of the natives to acquire a knowledge of English. The argument fondly urged by a certain class of conservatives against the spread of Christianity and education is, that though the people embrace the one or acquire the other, they are in practice not improved either morally or intellectually. Allowing that there are some unprincipled converts and many raw scholars, we cannot see that Christianity is morally, and education intellectually, a whit less beneficial for that. We are aware that our education has reared up a class of men who can think soundly on matters of great importance, and act with foresight and tact. We can point to individual instances near us, but we prefer taking a more distant one.

Madhava Rao, the Dewan of the Rajah of Travancore, presents the highest development of Hindoo intellect. On Lord Elphinstone's establishing the High School at Madras, he entered it while still very young. Mr. Powell, then fresh from Cambridge, and a stranger to the ennui of an Indian climate, was able to devote the best years of his Indian life to the training of a batch of young men, of whom Madhava Rao was the most conspicuous. His scholastic success can be judged of by the fact that he acted in the High School for Mr. Powell during a temporary absence of that gentleman. After obtaining a proficient's degree he entered our service as a clerk in the Accountant-general's office at Madras. Just at this time the late Rajah of Travancore was advised by General Cullen to provide his nephews, the future rulers of the State, with a competent English tutor. At the strong recommendation of Mr. George Norton and Messrs. Chamier and Montgomery, General Cullen named Madhava Rao to the Rajah, who approved of the arrangement. This is one of the few redeeming points in General Cullen's career. Madhava Rao was only too glad to accept the offer, and serve a State in which his father and uncle had distinguished themselves as Dewans. Ambition is as much an inherent quality in a Maharratta as fragrance is in the rose. The words "My Uncle" could not have inspired Louis Napoleon more than they did Madhava Rao. From the first he looked to the Dewan's signet. Under his tutorial care were placed the young princes of Travancore, among them the present Rajah and heir-apparent. As to his success, no better proof is needed than that one of these princes was made a Fellow of the Madras University a year before his own nomination to that distinction.

About four years after he entered the Rajah's service he was made a deputy of the then Dewan, an officer who, had he been half as jealous in domestic matters as he was officially, would not have served as a butt to so much merited censure. The nature of the administration was centralisation with all its evils, but without vigour or ability in the head. In times of anarchy men possessed of ambition combined with foresight always prefer being at a distance from the seat of the mock Government, and wait till the pear be ripe. Madhava Rao fought for the division of administration, and backed by his own high character for integrity—which never fails to awe Asiatics—he succeeded. In a short year he made the southern districts placed under him a model province, and won the approbation of all. Hardly a couple of years elapsed ere the wretched Dewan fell a victim to his own excesses, when a correspondence was busily going on between Calcutta and Madras as to the adoption of effective measures to ameliorate the general state of Travancore. At a time when salaries had fallen into arrears for several years, when taxes were levied in anticipation, when monopolies in their worst features were spreading demoralisation, when officials were preying on the people, when pampered courtiers were supporting those officials, when crimes were committed with perfect impunity, when the treasury was empty, when loans were contracted, when a formal request was made through the Resident for a temporary reduction of the subsidy, when the contingency alluded to in the fifth and sixth articles of the treaty between our Government and the Rajah had plainly occurred, annexation would have been simple justice, not to say a blessing to the people. Oudh did not present a worse picture, and had not Lord Dalhousie been compelled to retire by illness before directing his attention to Travancore fully, that little State would long ago have been a Collectorate. The death of the Dewan, the sepoy mutiny, and the natural disinclination of Lord Canning to extreme measures turned the tide. Madhava Rao, who had already gained a name for high administrative capacity, was, strongly backed by the resident, raised to the ministerial post.

With a conservative Rajah and a still more conservative Resident, he found it little better than impossible to inaugurate great reforms. However, he managed to draw Travancore out of the miserable quagmire in which he found it. He mercilessly swept away the official locusts sent to the districts by the former administrator. Public revenue thus found its way to the treasury, and no longer to private pockets. At the risk of no little unpopularity, he applied his shears to the overgrown extravagance in expenditure, the result of his predecessor's carelessness and effeminacy. He accomplished it with a courage shown only by Colonel Balfour. All great administrators, whether a Pitt, a Wellesley, or a Dalhousie, have evinced the power of organising and training up a staff of able subordinates. On however small a scale, Madhava Rao has exhibited this quality. With the help of some of these assistants he converted the police from an engine of oppression and terror into one of protection and peace. The treasury was full; salaries were regularly paid; there was no fear of a failure in paying the subsidy; crime decreased; the pests in the shape of petty public servants disappeared; and, in short, there was a change as complete as in a dissolving view. In a letter, dated 23rd March, 1859, the Madras Government, writing to that of India, says, "It is further to be noted that, subsequently to the receipt of the Honourable Court's orders of 30th April, 1856, and of the applications from this Government to that of India of 15th August, 1856, 23rd February and 13th May, 1857, the Dewan Krishna Row, to whose mal administration the evils which afflicted the Travancore state were mainly ascribed, has died. His successor, Madhava Rao, has received a liberal English education, is able and intelligent, and the complaints to Government of oppression and misrule in Travancore have greatly decreased since his assumption of office. Thus we see how the simple fact of Madhava Rao's coming to power turned the tide of affairs. It will be interesting to know how much Madhava Rao has enjoyed the confidence of independent men. When the Shanars in South Travancore rose en masse against the barbarous prohibition of the use of the shoulder-cloth among their females, and when the disturbance was at its height, a memorial signed by six of the London Society's missionaries was addressed to the Rajah. They concluded by saying, "We have, therefore, to entreat that your Highness will be pleased to grant the Dewan, with as little delay as possible, that increase of power which the present emergency calls for." Sir C. Trevelyan, who succeeded Lord Harris, was a terror to old Indians. General Cullen was compelled to retire, and Mr. Maltby was appointed Resident. How matters have proceeded since General Cullen's retirement and the late Rajah's death we lately described. How Mr. Maltby appreciated Madhava Rao's services will be perceived by the following passage in his farewell letter:—"You have had the opportunity at an unusually early age of doing important service to the State of Travancore, and more than this, of benefiting your countrymen far beyond the limits of Travancore, by the reputation which you have earned of administrative ability and uprightness of conduct. Go on as you have begun, and you will do incalculable good to the cause of education and civilisation among your countrymen."

It is our interest to encourage and support such natives in native states. They fully comprehend the superiority of Englishmen. They act in conformity with improved ideas, and counsel their chiefs to do so. We need not anticipate disloyalty from chiefs advised by a Dinkur Rao or a Madhava Rao. Nay, we may expect much benefit, commercially and otherwise. Our Government has shown wisdom in recognising the merits of Dinkur Rao, Salar Jung, and others, and we shall wait with hope to see what it will do for Madhava Rao. Even such a title as Ra-Bahadur would have immense effect in the State he serves.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PATNA, Jan. 20.—The visit of the Lieutenant-Governor has put us all on the qui vive at Bankipore. His Honour being expected on Sunday last by the ordinary up-train, all the official residents were in attendance at the railway station, a body of mounted police being drawn up in front of the portico as a guard of honour. Punctuality, they say, is the politeness of kings; but, alas! who shall describe the politeness of the East Indian Railway Company? The train arrived at last, being only two hours behind time; and the Lieutenant-Governor, with his staff, drove at once to his camp, which had been pitched in the centre of our race-course. Yesterday, at noon, a levee was held in the durbar tent, at which all the European officers were introduced, and his Honour entered into conversation with many of those present. After the levee private interviews were accorded to all who sought them. Immediately after, his Honour visited the Civil and Criminal Courts, and not only inspected cutcherries and record rooms, but quietly sat down in the courts of the judge, magistrates, and deputy-magistrates in succession, and spent two or three hours in watching the progress of whatever cases happened to be called on. However nervous the presiding officers may have felt in the presence of so distinguished an auditor, it must have been pleasant to them to see his Honour entering thus into the details of their work.

DELHI, Jan. 15.—A telegram has arrived here ordering the 1st Bengal Cavalry head quarters to proceed at once to Meerut. No reason is given for this move, which is rather unexpected, though for some time I believe the General has been "agitating" the measure, upon the grounds, I suppose, of it being injurious to the regiment to have it in detachments. Mr. Assistant Commissioner Saunders has gone to Goorgoon, I believe, to allow the officer there to leave for a few days. Mr. Berkeley, the judge of the Small Cause Court, "does" the kotawallee work during Mr. Saunders' absence—rather a strange arrangement to my thinking for a civil judge to exercise criminal powers, and this without Government orders! If some of our sharp lawyers in the North-West and Punjab are properly remunerated, they might make something out of every sentence passed by the acting city magistrate, or I am much mistaken. The weather is what is termed "raw cold," but no rain has yet fallen in or about Delhi. Clouds come and go without affording any, and the crops really require it now. The artillery (Grey's battery) are out under the walls of Selimgurh for practice, and the infantry are busy every morning and evening. There have been two accidents caused by falls from horses lately. Our brigadier got rather a severe one, but happily no bones were broken; not so another gentleman, a civilian, who got such an awkward spill that one leg was broken in three places; he is, however, I am glad to say, doing well. A private of the 82nd shot himself last week; no cause for the rash act is known.

RELIEF FOR LANCASHIRE.—The Lieut. Governor of the North-Western Provinces has asked each of the Commissioners to convene a meeting of the European and native residents of each station, as he visits it in the course of his cold weather tour, for the purpose of making known the great distress which prevails in Lancashire, and soliciting assistance in its relief. A meeting has been held at Meerut, at which Mr. Williams, the Commissioner, presided. The officers and men of the 8th hussars have subscribed a day's pay all round.

JHANSI, Jan. 7.—The Maharajah Scindiah was present at a grand field day lately, and expressed himself very much pleased. All the troops were out. He is expected to leave in a few days. The brigadier from Morar is expected every day, and he will remain here, report says, some twelve days, to have the brigade out. Weather better than usual; troops in good health; thermometer in the evening at 70 degs. No further news of the Commander-in-Chief has reached us. I will inform you of the movements of Scindiah. I suppose he has done all he wanted with his ryots here.

HOWRAH.—The rising town of Howrah, the Surrey side of Calcutta, was crowded by native and English visitors of all classes to attend the Fancy Fair held on the plain. Omnibuses, breaks, and all sorts of conveyances were pressed into the service of the crowds who poured into town from Calcutta and the vicinity. The day was unusually hot, and the roads far from creditable to the authorities, but the fair was most successful. The Dog Show was a great attraction, while "Aunt Sally," "Richardson's Show," the Gymnasium, and wondrous exhibitions of monstrosities, gave a very English aspect to the scene. The stalls, presided over by fair ladies, were almost cleared of their contents by the afternoon. A sum of no less than Rs. 15,000 was realised, of which Rs. 12,000 may be looked upon as gain. Government will contribute Rs. 10,000 more, and the whole will be devoted to the good work of building St. Thomas's School, under the energetic chaplain, Mr. Spencer, for the Christian boys and girls of this first of railway towns in India.

DALHOUSIE SANITARIUM.—Dr. Pemberton has sent in to Government an interesting report on the Himalayan Sanitarium of Dalhousie in 1862. The previous season was most unusual, being characterised by a series of storms of great severity during the months of April and May, and by a long continuance of the periodical rains, with a rain-fall probably about double the average. During the monsoon continued rain fell at Chini, in Spiti, in Lahool, and even in Ladak; whilst at Bara Bangal, where the rainy season is usually marked only by dense mists, rain fell steadily for two months. The rainfall was heavy in 1862 also in a tract which is often rainless. The mean fall was 73½ inches. From 3rd to 5th July rain continued to fall without intermission to the extent of sixteen inches. The Ravee river, consequently, was swept by the greatest flood ever known. The average number of European residents during the season was in the station 110, of whom rather more than half were children. An experience of two years convinces Dr. Pemberton that, owing to its low temperature, its exposure, the purity of its water, and its comparatively small rainfall, Dalhousie possesses in itself all the elements of a bona fide sanitarium for cases of debility produced by whatever cause, provided that no organic disease of the viscera exists. The extension of the rail ways to the foot of the hills renders the question of sanitarium one of general interest to all Indian residents.

BRANCH RAILWAY AND TRAMWAY COMPANIES.—Sir Charles Wood has condescended to express his approval of the arrangements made by the Government of India with the Indian Branch Railway and Tramway Companies, and writes thus patronisingly:—"The further development of this important subject I commit with confidence to the care of your Excellency's Government. By the course which it is proposed to adopt, great inducements will be held out to the investment of capital in the undertakings in question, and I trust that the success of the first experiments will be such that at no distant time contractors may be found ready to bear a larger proportion of their cost, and that private enterprise may thus become a most valuable assistance to Government in the improvement of the internal communications of India." In such details as these the Government of India is much better able to judge of what is right than Sir C. Wood, who so long and vexatiously opposed both the Branch Railway and Orissa Irrigation Companies.

NAGODE, Jan. 8.—The Commander-in-chief has been here and gone away again. He arrived on the evening of the 5th, and on the following morning, at six o'clock, inspected most minutely the 11th Regiment N.I. Several officers were called out. Sir Hugh Rose expressed himself greatly pleased with the regiment; the men were out until nine, so you may well imagine that it was not a formal inspection. In the afternoon, at 4.30 the 12th B.C. here were looked at, and the chief seemed greatly pleased with their very fine appearance. In the evening his Excellency dined with Colonel Watson and the officers of the 11th N.I. On the following morning the two companies of H.M.'s 97th Foot were inspected, and his Excellency expressed himself very much pleased with all their manoeuvres. After this the chief and his staff went to see the men of the 12th B.C. go through the customary games irregular cavalry are so famous for. The officers on the chief's staff joined in these sports, and proved themselves first-rate horsemen. This was the finale, and his Excellency left the station for Rewah at two in the afternoon.

COLONEL PRIESTLEY.—It is most extraordinary that this instance of Colonel Priestley's should have been fixed upon for agitation, when repeated courts martial are held, not only on the rank and file of the army, but on officers as well, for the use of insubordinate language spoken privately. Two memorable instances in point occur to us just now. The first is one which took place in a gallant regiment of the Light Division during the Crimean campaign. Two men were heard one day to speak disparagingly of the degree of courage of which their captain was possessed; they were confined, tried, found guilty, and flogged! Their crime was of the same stamp as Major Fitzgerald's, but as they were simply private soldiers, it is to be inferred they had no business to pass injurious reflections behind their superior's back; the privilege of speaking ill of people in this way with impunity being evidently conceded to gentlemen and officers only! The second case we wish to cite illustrates the working of the rule which, in the Fitzgerald affair, it is contended, should not be applied. A couple of years ago Captain Pym, in H.M.'s 75th at Allahabad, was brought to trial for telling a brother officer on his way to the parade ground what a shame it was, or (as military indictments say) "words to that effect," that there should be drill for the regiment on a Saturday, which in the station, we believe, was held as a holiday. This remark was reported to Colonel Ratcliffe, who commanded the regiment, and the captain was tried for having uttered it, on the ground that, if overheard, it was calculated to spread disaffection among his younger brother officers! If we recollect aright, the Captain was found guilty, and sentenced to be reprimanded. If Captain Pym had said the same thing at the mess-table or in a club-room, instead of in the street, he would have been equally amenable to trial, because his words were a comment upon the acts of his superior officer, and tended to make his authority odious and abhorrent; and why Major Fitzgerald should be deemed guiltless and at liberty to comment in a most offensive and insubordinate tone upon the head of the army in India is something, in the face of this circumstance, which we cannot understand.—Our Paper. Cannot understand! Our cotemporary ought to be ashamed to acknowledge that he cannot see through the motives of the onslaught against Sir Hugh Rose.—Delhi Gazette.

THE DEB RAJAH OF BOOTAN evidently needs a lesson. Letters recently received from Gowhaty inform us that that mighty potentate treated the messenger sent to him by Government, to demand an inquiry into certain outrages committed by the Booteahs, with the utmost contempt, and said publicly that he did not wish to entertain any Envoy. He promised, certainly, to inquire into the aggressions complained of, but qualified the promise by expressing his belief that they had never occurred. In conclusion, he said that he would send his agent to the agent of the Governor-General of the North-East frontier during the course of the current month, when all quarrels could be settled. If the above be a specimen of this wretched little potentate's style of addressing the Government of India it would be as well to let the settlement, as far as he is concerned, be of a decisive character. It is bad enough to have to allow such miserable puppets as these semi-monarchs to hold any power without having to put up with insolence into the bargain.—Englishman.

THE MEDICAL EVIDENCE ON LIEUT. JACKSON'S TRIAL.—(To the Editor of the Delhi Gazette).—DEAR SIR,—Your Mooltan correspondent's account of the medical evidence given in the case of the native who died subsequent to a flogging administered by Lieutenant Jackson must have surprised not a few of the profession. A human being is flogged to such an extent that the medical man first called in to see him "anticipated danger from sloughing of the integuments," "his back being covered with marks of stripes." The post mortem examination describes the back to have been covered with the "marks of blows, scabs, and scars," so that at all events ulceration must have occurred, if not sloughing. The immediate cause of death is allowed on all hands to have been bronchitis, and the only question to be solved by the medical officers examined was, "Was the bronchitis the direct effect of the flogging?" Both Drs. Sheehy and Burnside, who attended on the deceased, declared their belief that it was; the former even stated that on the first inspection of the sufferer he anticipated danger from "the supervention of bronchitis." So far so good; but now we come to the most unaccountable portion of these officers' evidence, elicited on cross-examination. Dr. Sheehy states that he could not explain why he anticipated the "intervention of bronchitis," and Dr. Burnside contents himself with a bare adherence to his expressed opinion that the flogging and the bronchitis were cause and effect, while at the same time admitting that he knew of no well authenticated case in which bronchitis had followed as an effect of flogging. I hope, Mr. Editor, for the sake of our profession that your correspondent has omitted some portion of the evidence of Assistant-surgeons Sheehy and Burnside, but if not the ends of justice have not been served by their appearance in the witness-box, and their ignorance has resulted in misleading the members of the Court. It can scarcely be supposed that neither of these officers were ever taught in the schools, if not by observation, that "when the functions of a large portion of integument are suddenly suspended the healthy balance between them and those of the lungs is destroyed; the latter become with other internal organs greatly congested," and the way is at once opened for bronchitis or pneumonia to supervene. It may be quite true that Surgeon Macintire and Surgeon Bacot have neither of them seen in their extensive experience bronchitis succeed to flogging. Such negative evidence is beyond the question. Have Surgeon Macintire or Surgeon Bacot ever seen a human being's back covered with marks of blows, scabs, and scars, and disease of the lungs not supervene? Neither is it enough to say, that because the native had diseased kidneys, and because bronchitis often accompanies such a condition, that the fatal attack to which this man fell a victim was caused by an affection which must have had its abode for a long period in his frame, and not by the cruel flogging, which at once suspended the functions of the skin of so large a portion of his frame, destroyed the healthy balance of his system, lighted up disease in his lungs, and hurried him to the grave. The finger of scorn has been long pointed at the uncertainty of medical evidence, and the ease with which contradictory or exceptional cases may be squeezed out of medical witnesses by legal experts, but it is not often, I am thankful to say, that medical ignorance interposes between the law and the criminal.—I am, yours, &c., AN ASSISTANT SURGEON.

AMUSING ACCIDENT.—A disastrous but still amusing accident took place on Christmas evening last, at Shahagunge, a place situated within walking distance from the railway terminus. To celebrate the great day, a Baboo invited a few friends to dinner, in honour of the festival, and when all the guests assembled, the dinner was held, and bottles passed round. In the course of a short time all who were present on the spot became quite elated with wine, and the host, in order to heighten the degree of amusement, and not sufficiently gratified with the admiration with which his guests spoke of him, begged of the audience to pay attention, and to allow him to show them an experiment of his which led to a recent discovery. Saying this, he retreated into a dark room in the house, and after having washed his face with brandy, he came out and requested one of his friends to light his face with a lucifer, which he held in his hand. This person, anxious as he was to find an opportunity of returning the obligation which he received from his host, unhesitatingly complied with his request, and the unfortunate victim of the flames is now under medical treatment. The face particularly of this wonderful chemist is seriously burnt and disfigured, and it will leave an indelible mark, should he survive the danger. This sad occurrence will, it is hoped, be a lesson to that portion of "Young Bengal" which represents the "hard drinkers," and imitates the vices of the Europeans, instead of their good qualities. We need scarcely say anything to the unhappy sufferer in the way of advice, as he will gain wisdom by experience, and be better able in future to understand the moral of the proverb that a "Burnt child dreads the fire," which his parents seem to have so incautiously neglected inculcating on him in his childhood.

THE TERMINI AT BENARES AND ALLAHABAD.—A few days ago we announced that orders had been issued for the construction of a pukka road from the Tonse river to Allahabad for the convenience of dawk carriages in bringing passengers when the train will run to that river. The subject has since come before the Lieutenant Governor, who, we are happy to say, has devoted some attention to the matter. His Honour has suggested to the Supreme Government, what must strike every one as a superior convenience to all parties, the formation of a tram road, or rather the running of carriages of a light description on the rails laid down for the future railway—such carriages to be propelled by coolies or horse power. There cannot be a doubt that the proposal is a good one. The expense of making a road, through so much swamp, would be something very great; and when completed would probably be of use only for a very short time, the completion of the bridge and the appearance of the iron horse on this bank of the river rendering such road entirely useless, and the money expended as sunk without a proper return. The proposal of the Lieutenant-Governor has gone up to the Supreme Government, and we doubt not will be sanctioned, which will greatly facilitate the formation of the rail to Allahabad.—Delhi Gazette.

MEERUT, Jan. 1.—H.M.'s 104th marched out of the station yesterday en route for Bareilly; and H.M.'s 90th marched in this morning from Allahabad. Colonel Birch, of the 104th, met with an accident on parade, his horse falling with him and hurting him severely. We have had a meeting here in favour of the unfortunate Lancashire operatives, at which I am glad to say Rs. 2,000 were realised; and I believe it is estimated that collections in the neighbouring towns and villages, and the different collectorates, will ultimately swell the amount to not under Rs. 8,000. Similar meetings are being held in other large stations, of whose benevolent proceedings and results in this good cause you will doubtless hear as their labours progress. No other news, as the station is very quiet and dull.

SUEZ CANAL.—On the 18th November was the performance of another act in the farce of the Suez Canal. On that day M. de Lesseps, accompanied by the Sheik Islam, the Ulemas, the Catholic Bishop of Alexandria, and all the employes of the company that could be spared, admitted the water of the Mediterranean into the Lake Timsah through the narrow ditch, which he has spent half the capital of the company in cutting, pronouncing at the same time the following formula, in which Said Pasha and the Almighty are mixed together in a spirit as latitudinarian, to say the least of it, as that which employed both the Ulemas and the Catholic priests to bless the work:—"In the name of his Highness Said Pasha I command that the waters of the Mediterranean be let into the Lake Timsah, by the grace of God." Since the invention of iron-clad ships, and Armstrong and Whitworth guns, combined with our possession of Aden and Perim, have rendered Egypt of little importance as a step towards India, the French Government seems to have lost their interest in the Suez Canal, and it is remarked that on the occasion of the above ceremony not a French flag was displayed. Even the Pasha seems to have doubts as to whether he is altogether wise to spend such enormous sums solely on the word of M. de Lesseps, and he has invited Mr. Hawkshaw, a famous English hydraulic engineer, to inspect the site of Port Said—the Mediterranean entrance of the canal—and to report upon it.—Mr. Forbes's Letter to the "Herald."

SIR HUGH ROSE.—Sir Hugh Rose's forced retirement from public life, if indeed it be determined on, will be only temporary. In war, should England be unhappily involved in such a calamity, the country will not afford to lose the services of one of the best general officers in the British army, and in peace his experience in the details of military organisation and discipline will be eagerly sought for in the councils of the War Department. As is not unfrequently the case, the malcontents and the party concerned in destroying the popularity of Sir Hugh Rose, and undermining his public and official character, have been the loudest in their clamour. The blustering of these gentlemen, and the rabid animosity of the Friend of India, may have misled some into the belief that Sir Hugh Rose is as unpopular in the army as he is represented, but we have good reason to know that this anti-Rose party by no means comprises the majority of the whole army. Indeed, considering Sir Hugh Rose's persevering efforts to improve discipline, and to force officers to make themselves acquainted with their duty, it is not to be wondered at that he is unpopular in many quarters. It would have been strange if he had not been. But when he goes, he will carry with him the regrets of a very large proportion of the officers of both services, and of by far the greater number of the soldiers, for whose welfare and best interests he has consistently and conscientiously striven.—Delhi Gazette.

THE CITY OF CALCUTTA does not yet enjoy the privileges of the meanest little country town of Italy under Roman rule 2,000 years ago. The English politicians, who are ever jabbering about freedom (for themselves), seem as stingy in allowing it to others as the Czar Nicholas was. The bureaucratic class of India, the civilian oligarchy, cannot trust outsiders with the smallest exercise of power. Three and three are not six, in fact, unless one of the privileged class sits by and nods assent. The Municipal Bill for Calcutta has been withdrawn for the present, in order to introduce a new one providing for the presence of a Government servant amongst the members, and this reason is assigned for rejecting the present Bill, by no meaner authority than the Earl of Elgin himself, a ruler whose character is founded on his liberality in assisting self-government in Canada! Surely, the English system that succeeded so well in America would answer here, or, at least, must be deserving of a fair experiment. The new Viceroy must be completely under the influence of the "traditional" members of his Council, or he would never have uttered such a sentiment as that attributed to him.—Hills.

UNCOVENANTED ASSOCIATION.—As many of our readers are interested in the scheme for the Uncovenanted Association Fund, they will, perhaps, be glad to know that the fund is progressing very favourably, and that great hopes are entertained of its complete success. The number of subscribers actually enrolled at this date amounts to two hundred and twenty, drawing salaries in the aggregate of 18,000 Rs. per mensem. Of this number twenty are residents of Lucknow, eleven of the Punjab, and the rest of Allahabad. Among the names appear men of the railway, the education, and the police departments; there are also a few merchants. The most singular feature, however, of the scheme is the fact that more than one-third of the subscribers are natives. If it be remembered that the prospectus has yet been circulated to a very limited extent, the degree of success attained may be said to be very encouraging. It is in contemplation, we learn, that, as soon as the number of subscribers may warrant such a measure, application shall be made to Government for aid to the extent of the gratuities paid annually to uncovenanted servants on abolition of office; and that subscriptions be deducted from the monthly pay abstracts, as in the case of the pension fund, and 6 per cent. interest allowed on all deposits. No claimants for relief have yet appeared, and it is to be hoped that time will be allowed for the consolidation of the fund.—Delhi Gazette.

NANKIN.—It is said to be General Burgerine's intention to attack Nankin before another month has elapsed. He has about five thousand well-armed and disciplined Chinese, a good park of artillery, including some rifled cannon, and a considerable number of Chinese gunboats—that is junks armed with English guns, and armed river steamers available for the purpose. The attempt will be a bold one, as the rebels are very numerous both there and in the surrounding country, and the city is surrounded by a triple wall. He will not be aided by either the English or French.—Englishman.

SIR CHARLES WOOD.—The native community, led on by the British Indian Association, intend forwarding an address to the Secretary of State for India, expressive "of the satisfaction and gratitude with which the people of India contemplate the wise and beneficent policy which has distinguished his administration and control of Indian affairs, with special adVERTISEMENT to the just and enlightened principles which breathe through his despatches on the breaches of contract, and the sale of waste lands, and the extension of the permanent settlement."—Phoenix.

RAILWAY TRAVELLING.—The heartfelt groans which are forced from the public by the unearthly hour at which the train leaves Agra, necessitating a broken night's rest, a rising at three A.M., a bitterly cold drive, and all the horrors of making good one's departure amid the gloom and confusion that invest the railway station at Agra with all the characteristic features of Erebus, are enough to pierce the stony hearts of the railway Philistines into whose hands we have fallen. All sorts of plans have been devised to escape the intolerable inconvenience unhappy travellers are subjected to, but none of them have been equal to the emergency. Some recommend passing the night in a tent in the neighbourhood of the station. Another favourite plan is to go to bed the night before in the railway carriage. There is risk in the latter, for the chance is great that you go to bed in the wrong carriage, and wake up in the morning to find yourself cold and uncomfortable in a carriage that has not been limbered up at all—if that is the right phrase to use—to the train. One gentleman we heard of, bound for Etawah, tried on two successive mornings to start, but on each occasion was just in time to be too late. Determined to hit it off the third time, he went down the night before, and slept in a carriage; but this plan succeeded too well, for he slept so soundly that he did not wake till the train reached Cawnpore! It is a question for the railway company's legal advisers to decide whether a ticket from Agra to Allahabad entitles the holder to a whole night's rest in a carriage previously. We should think not, and should not be surprised to hear that the station-master had been directed to put a stop to the practice, by playing a trick upon the night lodgers, putting them to bed comfortably in a carriage that was not destined to go at all. The safest place to sleep in would be the luggage van; but there, if you oversleep yourself, you are liable to be rudely awakened by having a portmanteau thrown in (as they know how to throw things into a luggage-van at Indian railway-stations), and alighting on your head.

MR. LAING has replied to an address from the Bombay Association, which, in its heartiness of tone, contrasts strangely with the conduct of the British Indian Association. The Bombay natives say:—"Although at a distance from the scene of your recent labours, we were by no means unobservant witnesses of the numerous and eminent services which you rendered to the State during your short tenure of office. The change which you have wrought in the financial position of the British Indian Empire within the short period of three years from your assumption of office is wonderful, and, indeed, unprecedented." They express the deepest regret at Mr. Laing's resignation.

In his reply Mr. Laing shows that native and English interest in India are identical, a great truth the Bengalese have yet to learn. He speaks in strong terms of the "imminent bankruptcy" which stared the empire in the face on his first arrival, and acknowledges the great assistance rendered by Sir B. Frere. He justly says:—"There is nothing in the common origin of the race or in the faculties given by nature, and there will soon be nothing in outward circumstances and in material appliances, to prevent India from rising to a level with other great nations of the Indo-European family. But a high standard can only be attained by great efforts; and the action of a Government, however wise and paternal, goes but a little way to supply the place of individual action and example." The Times, in an article on the address and reply, gently apologises for its former attacks on Mr. Laing.

LADY ELGIN.—From a Malta letter in the Englishman we observe that Lady Elgin, during her short stay in the island, was the guest of the Governor, with whom Prince Alfred was living at the same time. Sir Charles Trevelyan when at Malta visited the new market, recently erected at a cost of £19,000. It is said to be the most perfectly adapted for the purpose of any in Europe, and yields an annual rental of £3,000. The new market of Calcutta is, we fear, too far advanced to profit by the design.

THE JEWS OF SOUTH INDIA.—The Cochin Courier publishes some interesting details regarding the Jews of South India. In 1854 there were 114 in Travancore, of whom 22 were children; and in 1849 there were 1,277 in Cochin, of whom 424 were children. These figures are said to represent the number of the community at the present day. In Cochin 200 of the Jews are white. A few of the latter are prosperous, but, as a body, they are extremely poor, without any regular or profitable occupation. At one time the white Jews imported muslins, millinery, and perfumes from Calcutta; but this trade has passed into other hands, and they now employ themselves as coopers, dealers in hides, and bookbinders. At the age of eight days the child is circumcised, and at thirteen years he assumes the phylacteries. At eighteen he usually marries, having been betrothed some six or twelve months previously to a girl, perhaps five years his junior. Before taking a house, he nails on to the door post, or scoops out a groove therein and inserts, a small tube in which he has placed some portions of Scripture inscribed most carefully upon fine leather. He and all his friends, on entering and leaving the house, are bound to kiss the tube, or Mazuzah, either with the lips, or through the instrumentality of the fingers; and on relinquishing his tenancy he is forbidden to remove it, unless he knows that a Gentile is to succeed him. He employs either poor Hindoos or Christians as domestic servants, on account of the inability of anyone of his own faith to prepare food on the Sabbath; and if not able to procure this assistance he uses a quantity of vinegar in making the Saturday's provision on Friday afternoon, and thus preserves it.

THE RESTORATION OF MYSORE.

It is well known that for many years past the aged Rajah of Mysore has earnestly desired the restoration of his kingdom. Sixty-three years ago, when the lion-hearted Tippoo, preferring death to deposition, met his death sternly within the walls of his beloved capital, and his Empire came to be dismembered, we took the present Rajah of Mysore, the descendant of the old Hindoo Princes deposed by Hyder, and then an infant, from the poverty and obscurity to which that adventurer had consigned him, and seated him securely on the throne of the present Kingdom of Mysore, with a revenue exceeding that of the ancient Hindoo Kingdom. In siding in the establishment and administration of the new kingdom, Colonel Wellesley first fully manifested those great abilities, both civil and military, which led him by successive steps to the crowning glory of Waterloo. Subsequently, however, the administration of the country fell into the hands of the Brahmins, and the wily Priesthood thought more of the interests and aggrandisement of their caste, than of the prosperity or advancement of the kingdom. Priestly misrule is a matter of very ancient date, and of universal notoriety. The peculiar training of a priesthood seems to unfit its members wholly for the duties of Government. They are essentially a bigoted, narrow-minded, and exclusive class in all countries, and their system of Government, whether we seek an example of it in Mysore, Rome, or Geneva, has invariably proved equally corrupt and intolerant. We need not be surprised then to find that under Brahminical influence the administration of Mysore was inefficient and oppressive, though probably not more so than that of the Native States. The fact is, that evils, considerable as they were, which attended the Rajah's rule, were greatly exaggerated, and that Lord William Bentinck lived to admit that he had acted rashly in taking the administration of the country out of the hands of the Rajah. The reports of the Commission subsequently proved that the misgovernment of the Rajah had been magnified beyond measure, and that though there was much requiring and capable of amendment, probably half the Native States of India at that time furnished equal reasons with Mysore for the assumption of their Government by us. A rumour worthy of more than ordinary attention has within the past week been in circulation, that the Rajah's wish for the restoration of his kingdom is about to be gratified. We cordially hope that the report will prove correct, and that the pledges under which we assumed the administration of Mysore will thus be faithfully carried out. The Rajah has an indisputable right to the restoration of his kingdom, he of course offering us such guarantees for the future good government of the country as shall be considered ample to justify us in returning it to him. We have duties and responsibilities as well towards the people as towards the Prince of Mysore, and we should be slow indeed to recommend that the former should be sacrificed to the latter. But if ample evidence can be procured to show that our assumption of the country was intended merely as a temporary expedient for reforming the administration and putting it on a secure footing for the future; that that end has been now fully and successfully accomplished; and that the Rajah is prepared to offer us an adequate guarantee for future good government, we should be neglecting our duty as impartial journalists, and be false to that policy which amid much odium and overwhelming odds we have consistently, earnestly, and we may add successfully advocated, if we did not record our conviction that the Rajah of Mysore has a sacred and indefeasible right to have his wishes complied with, and that such an act of restitution, demonstrating as it would plainly do the unselfishness, justice, and reality of the new policy inaugurated by Lord Canning, and the bond fide character of the great Proclamation, would contribute more to the future power and prestige of England in the East than a dozen violent usurpations or than many a brilliant victory.

The right of the Rajah to his kingdom, in the happy condition it has now been brought into under the administration of British officers, is placed beyond a doubt by public documents. The assumption was intended to be simply an expedient for reforming the administration, and placing it on a sound foundation for the future. The Court of Directors, in 1835, expressed themselves as being anxious to adhere as much as possible to native usages in the temporary administration of the country, and not to introduce a system which could not be worked by native agency, when the country should be restored to the Rajah; and again in 1856 the Court of Directors signified their commands "that the administration of the Mysore territories shall continue on the same footing, until the arrangements for their good government shall have been so firmly established as to be secure from future disturbances." It would not, doubtless, be beyond the ingenuity of a Dalhousie to explain away these allusions by stating, as in the case of the Carnatic, that they might be taken as intimating an intention of restoring the kingdom, but that they confer no right on the Rajah to have it back; but those in whom the zeal of ambition and the corrupting influences of despotic power, widely and successfully wielded, have not blunted the sense of right and dimmed the capacity of comprehending plain English, will be slow to put any construction on those words of the Court of Directors other than their evident meaning. They show satisfactorily to any one, save some rampant annexationist—if any such there be now in existence—that the assumption by Lord William Bentinck of the Mysore territory was intended only as a temporary measure, and that the kingdom was to be restored to the Prince, to whom we originally gave it, so soon as due provision had been made for the good government of the people.

That provision has now been made. Close upon a crore of rupees, the accumulated surplus revenues of many years past, lies in the Government treasury, to the credit of the Kingdom of Mysore. It is a nice little sum, and offers great temptations to appropriate it. A great deal of good could be effected with it, and it has been saved through British instrumentality. Its existence is certainly due to our interference. It is, without doubt, sad that we should have to refer to the simple yielding up to a man what is his own, as a creditable act; but to abstain from wrong-doing under great temptation, and when it is so easy of accomplishment, demands no ordinary virtue either in individuals or nations, and our declining to take advantage of our power, and our preference of our pledged promise to a fertile territory and an immense treasure, will be viewed throughout India as a splendid instance of British good faith and punctilious national morality.

The guarantees offered by the Rajah are most acceptable. He offers, we believe, to allow the system of administration and the officers who administer it to remain as at present, so that the change will be little more than nominal; and the Rajah having already suffered for his sins of government, and having by experience learned the benefits of British administration, will be slow to set himself in any way in opposition to the advice of his Ministers. It was under purely native management that the evils which led to the assumption of the country arose, and under British management, which has already proved so successful, we need be under no apprehension of their renewal.—Athenæum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HYDERABAD, Jan. 5.—I ought to have told you before that the intention of substituting an English superintendent of police and constabulary for the present Kutwalee department as constituted in the cantonment of Secunderabad had been relinquished. It appeared that the proposed measure had not been contemplated from any necessity of the case, or with a view to improving the department, but was simply a measure of economy. Some sort of necessity for the removal of two native regiments from this station subsisted, and as this diminution of the force would have brought a pressure upon the remaining for the discharge of the usual duties of the cantonment, a police was to be substituted to relieve it in some part. It is now found to be necessary to remove but one regiment, and the change proposed in regard to the police is relinquished. Of course, if a hope had been before formed of a remodelling of the Courts of Requests it is now that the motive for the contemplated change in the police department is understood. His Highness the Nizam has acquired a taste for European commodities. I am glad of it. Everything in this shape is progression. He has given a large commission to be executed at our Presidencies or in England. This is a right course. Heretofore the natives have restricted themselves to purchasing second-hand goods at auction sales at high prices. His Highness has bought many carriages in this way, which, I believe, the élite of your society in Calcutta—I should have said fashionables—would not condescend to use. His Highness's present commission is for chandeliers and candelabras. Hunt and Monnet, apparently enterprising men, have established themselves here in business. I wish they may have encouragement to import some of the curious mechanisms occasionally advertised in Calcutta. The Nizam's bounties are on an excessively liberal scale. I could wish to see the current of his profusion directed to another channel; it cannot be better employed than in introducing into Hyderabad samples of the European arts. It is not too far-fetched to say that, from his Highness's taste for European commodities, we may see that he is free from the prejudice and bigotry of some of his countrymen, of whom it has been reported that they have objected to sitting in chairs because of its being an infidel custom. We are all anxiously expecting Mr. Yule; he brings golden opinions with him from all quarters, private and public. I suppose, however, there will be some change in our régime; I have seen ten Residents here; every successor brought fundamental alterations to the administration of his predecessor, with the exception of Mr. Bushby in the following of Colonel Low. Colonel Davidson's administration was good, quite sufficient to the day—a day of so much difficulty as to give to my expression "good" what I have not meant—a signification of damning with faint praise. But there is nevertheless much room for improvement; where is there not? And it is not at all likely that Hyderabad, a native State, can be exempt from a common condition.

NEW JOINT-STEAMSHIP COMPANY.—We lately stated that Colonel Ouchterlony, of the Madras Engineers, was about to visit England, with the approval of his Government, to establish a company for undertaking Government as well as private works in India. A prospectus is accordingly published of the "Indian Contract Building Company, Limited," with a capital of £250,000, in shares of £10 each. The company propose ultimately to extend their operations to Ceylon and the rest of India. A list of Government works ready to be carried out is published, and Government has given land, with a siding into the railway terminus, for the company's depot of building material. They propose, in all cases, to use machinery, where practicable; to keep such a stock as to enter on remunerative "time contracts;" to engage the most skilled workmen; and to establish a strict audit of accounts. A depot will be established on the Neilgherries, and at each large railway station, while mills will be set up in the Teak forests. The prospectus mentions as works to be afterwards undertaken, the Bas's Lighthouse off Ceylon, the granite, shell, and lantern of which are lying at Galle; a Lighthouse on the Lacondives, where the Colombo was wrecked; a tramway and incline from Coimbatore railway station to the summit of the Neilgherries, at the cost of a quarter of a million sterling; and the old project called "Blackwood's Harbour," by forming on the submerged sand-bank called "the Armogaum shoal" a wave screen on iron screw piles, which it is believed would afford in all weathers a perfect shelter to the extensive anchorage between the bank and the main land, and admit of the resort thither for refuge or for trade of a large fleet of merchantmen and war vessels. If this were accomplished, the entire commerce of the Coromandel coast would resort to "Armogaum." We hope Colonel Ouchterlony will succeed, but he should associate with himself really practical as well as scientific men.

THE "JASON."—The wreck of the magnificent screw steamer Jason is fast being dismantled. The whole of the dry and perishable cargo has been saved, with the exception of a few cases, one of which contained combustibles. A portion of the cargo saved has been forwarded to Calcutta on board the Queen of the South, while the bulk of it has been sent in the ship Glen Isle. Everything which could be taken out of her has already been removed; the less bulky articles, such as knives, glass-ware, wines, &c., have been brought down to Madras, where they will be sold by public auction. The mizen-mast, which is of very large size, has been removed, and the other two will be taken out so soon as the heavy portion of the cargo has been brought up. There are still in the vessel about seventy-five tons of copper, two hundred tons of spelter, and about five or six hundred tons of patent fuel, all of which, it is expected, will be got out of the hold within the next few days. There will be some difficulty, however, in the matter, as the high surf which was running on the 11th and 12th of January damaged the vessel, and caused her to settle down considerably in the sand, so that at the present moment she has about fifteen or sixteen feet of water in her hold, and the various compartments are no longer water-tight. The Government, with much liberality, has placed a European diver at the disposal of the agents for the underwriters (by whose aid it is hoped that the metal and fuel will be saved), and should his efforts prove successful, the underwriters will be saved from a loss of about a lakh and a-half of rupees. After the metal has been brought out, an attempt will be made, by means of two large rotatory pumps, lent by Government, to clear the vessel of water, in order that the engineers may be enabled to remove the engines, which are worth a large sum of money. As the vessel was well supplied with ships' stores and cuddy stores, it is more than probable that some portion of them will be saved, if the water can be pumped out of her. After the ship was given up to the agents for the underwriters, Captain Hurst offered his own services and those of his crew to the agents, for the purpose of assisting in saving as much as possible from the wreck, and by their efforts much valuable property has been rescued, which otherwise would have been lost. The manner in which the crew have acted since the untimely disaster happened, shows that the discipline on board the Jason must have been almost perfect; not a single instance of drunkenness has occurred amongst the men, while officers and crew have vied with each other in doing all they could to serve the interests of all concerned in the vessel. Too much praise cannot be given to them all, and we are glad to learn that the master attendant is using his best endeavours to assist the men in obtaining employment on board other ships. The official inquiry had not terminated when the mail left Madras.—Athenæum.

CHARGE OF MISSIONARY KIDNAPPING.—The Madras Times reports a case in which the Rev. Mr. Jenkins, of the Wesleyan Mission, was charged with kidnapping under the Penal Code in the police court. Section 361 declares that "whoever takes or entices any minor under fourteen years of age if a male, or under sixteen years of age if a female, or any person of unsound mind, out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor or person of unsound mind, without the consent of such guardian, is said to kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardian."

ship." Coopa Row, a lad who declared himself to be above sixteen years of age, is the son of Sathoo Row, Gomastah in the Moonsiff's Court at Manargoody, in Tanjore. Coopa had been for two years in the habit of visiting the Rev. Mr. Simpson for instruction, and one day did not return home. The father sued Mr. Simpson before the Moonsiff, who issued an attachment against the boy that he might not lose his caste. The father alleged that his son was under fourteen, and was acting contrary to his orders, declaring at the same time that "asserting his own religion to be a damnable one he prefers Christianity to be the one that could give him salvation; and that he already discontinued the performances of certain portions of his daily ceremonies." The Moonsiff made the boy over to a Receiver under Sec. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code till the suit should be decided, but did so without giving notice to the defendant, because "the boy appeared to be so desperate as to make himself useless to his father, by breaking his caste if he had sufficient opportunity." Mr. Simpson then petitioned the Civil Judge for a removal of the attachment, and was ready to prove the boy's majority. The judge referred the case to the Sudder Ameen, but the boy returned to the father, who asserts that Mr. Jenkins sent him postage stamps to pay the boy's railway fare to Madras. The case was then brought against Mr. Jenkins, in the Madras police court. The boy himself, on being questioned, said that he preferred being sworn on the Bible to being affirmed as a Hindoo, and very intelligently showed he knew himself to be more than sixteen; his father had told him he was sixteen a year before, when he went to the Mission school. The old man here, in great anguish, exclaimed, "The boy talks like a madman—he is infatuated, and under persuasion." The boy had previously returned to his father from pity, and to see his wife. Dr. Porteous examined the boy, and had no hesitation whatever in giving it as his most decided opinion that he was over, rather than under, sixteen years of age. The magistrate, Colonel Colbeck, on summing up the evidence, dismissed the case, on the ground that there was not a tittle of proof of any enticing or taking away on the part of Mr. Jenkins—and that the boy was upwards of 16, and had a perfect right to do as he pleased. "The law had named 14 as the age at which boys ceased to be minors, an age which the magistrate thought fair towards all parties—and it would be hard indeed when a boy came to years of discretion that he should not be allowed to judge for himself as to the true means of saving his soul." The father declared he would appeal to the High Court. The missionaries seem, in this matter, to have acted most discreetly, and as they were bound to do. The conduct of the boy proved his right to act for himself in so vital a matter. This is the first case of the kind under the Penal Code. It must be observed that even if the boy had been under 14, Mr. Simpson had not enticed or taken him from his father, who himself placed him at the Mission school for two years.—Friend of India.

SECUNDERABAD, Jan. 11.—The 12th Regt. M. N. I. marched out of the cantonment en route to Kamptee. H.M.'s 180th Regt. of Foot came into the cantonment, all right. The 3rd Regt. L. C., which arrived at this station en route from Bellary to Kamptee, halted here and moved from its encampment on the 12th inst., about five miles out of the cantonment. The regiment, it is believed, will not reach Kamptee before the 20th proximo. All's well up to date.

RURAL MISSION.—The Rev. Narayan Sheshadri, a native missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, has founded a new rural mission in the Decan, selecting, as the scene of his labours, the town of Indapur and the surrounding villages. Indapur is the largest town between Poona and Sholapore, and a good deal of inland trade is carried on there. It is about twenty miles distant from Deksal, but the two places are, eventually, to be connected by a tramway. One of the principal reasons for choosing Indapur was, that for the past twenty-five years the Gospel has been more or less preached in the place and surrounding districts, and that, at one time, the Rev.

James Mitchell had a European catechist stationed there, with a number of schools under him. The missionaries of the Free Church have ever been ready and successful in their endeavours to forward the cause of native education, wisely perceiving that, as the leaven of instruction tells upon the mass, their minds will be fitter to receive, and digest, the all-important truths of Christianity. That this is manifest, the spirit in which the natives have received measures, suggested by a real interest in their welfare, and a sincere desire to promote their interests, is clearly proved. Thuggee, dacoity, infanticide, suttee, and Merriah sacrifices have been put down, the civil rights of religious converts secured, and the re-marriage of widows legalized; but from the mass these benefits drew forth no cry or feeling of gratitude; on the contrary, they were regarded with hostility and suspicion. Sunk in an abyss of ignorance the most profound, and slaves to the most degrading superstitions, the natives will never leave the idolatry which has existed for ages, until education, the handmaid of true religion, spreading through the length and breadth of the land, exerts its beneficial tendency. With it will come the spirit of inquiry, and the claims of the Bible to be considered as the revelation of God's will to men, be largely investigated. Meanwhile, let us wait and hope, for if the progress is slow, at least it is sure. Contributions for the educational department of this mission, or any other objects connected with it, will be thankfully received by Mr. Narayan Sheshadri at Indapur, by any of the Free Church missionaries, in Bombay or Poona, or by the editor of the Bombay Guardian.—Deccan Herald, Jan. 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Gossip.—Unlike the native population of her sister Presidencies, that of Bombay conforms a great deal to English manners and customs. The Baboo of Bengal, who may have degreed at the University as B.A., still keeps his wife in the Zenana. The rich natives of the N. W. P., Oude, and the Punjab, holding, as they do, mercantile communications with London and Paris, continue to live in muddy, dingy, tumble-down looking houses. But on the Bombay esplanade you meet with the Parsee ladies taking their morning and evening drives, and in the city and its suburbs you meet with palatial residences inhabited by Parsees, whose style of living might well vie with that of the Governor. They are making rapid marches in civilisation and fortune, they own great mercantile firms, cotton screws, &c., and bid fair in a short time to shove their European rivals to the wall. Their home is here, and their wealth remains with them, and in doing good to the State they benefit themselves. In the case of the European it is different. The moment he makes a little money that will serve to keep him in easy, if not affluent, circumstances at home, the European winds up his business, and goes to his native land. This state of affairs cannot but be a damage to the Indian commonwealth, and something ought and must be done to induce Europeans to make India their home.—The work of reform and reduction is going on silently but surely here. Compared with Oude, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that Bombay stands unexcelled. In the latter, when I left it, earnest work was going on, but in a very extravagant style. Fancy a Commissioner at Lahore, and thirty-two miles away, at Umritsur, with a rail communication between the two cities, where is another Commissioner; again, separate from the Commissionership, lying at the base of the Simla hills, is a Commissioner for Simla! In fact, every fifty or sixty miles you go you meet with a Commissioner, with the usual office establishment and "contingencies." Then look at the Punjab frontier; there are actually now more men keeping that line than were necessary to preserve peace along it during the mutiny. And yet the border is turbulent. Not long ago a raid was committed near Kusmore, in which some lives were lost, and something like three hundred camels stolen.—The head-quarters of the Indus Flotilla have by this time been removed to Sukkur, and Mittenkote has been deserted. Now they will require an additional post there, and at the same time be compelled to keep the flotilla at Sukkur. It cannot be denied that the steamers did something towards keeping the peace, by simply lying at anchor there, and I would not at all wonder to hear of raids near Mittenkote, now that the steamers have been removed. The police chowkies are unable to keep the border in peace at this place even with the help of the force at Asnee. Suddenly they descend, the Belooches, Murrees, and Wuzeries, rob the inhabitants and flee to their hilly retreats, across a swamp that skirts the base of their hills, by roads and ways known to none but themselves. Their horses are animals that know no fatigue, at a swinging gallop they come thirty and forty miles, and after a little rest, during which their riders rob a village, they go back the same distance without being much distressed. It is now about fifteen years since the work of police reform was first commenced, and three years since first the actual remodelling of the force took place, yet it is not all right. In 1848 it was considered that to render the police an efficient body, it was necessary to separate it from the judicature and revenue—for, reasoned the heads of Government, it is natural for a man to pursue that line in which fame and fortune await him, and if we make a man a police as well as a revenue officer, or a magistrate, the man will neglect his police duties, or attend more to his revenue and judicial duties, which will give him a name, and of course a fortune; so they resolved to separate the departments, and sought to make the police a department by itself, subject to the magistrate, yet independent of him in the details of its working; and how have they done this here in Bombay? Why, Mr. Editor, I'll simply make a statement founded on fact, and leave you to judge if the reform has made any great progress. We have in the Bombay Presidency Revenue Commissioners who are Commissioners of Police as well, and who always have on hand more of revenue matters than they can go through, and then we have joint magistrates and police officers, whose salaries are shared under the heads of "Police" and "Law and Justice." The Bore Ghaut Works are nearly finished. His Excellency the Governor, with Colonel Bruce and the staff, lately paid a visit to the place. They left Parell by an early special train, and came in late in the evening. I think it is a remarkable fact, and one well worth mentioning, that a lady after her husband's death took up the contract and executed the work, one of the greatest, if not the greatest, specimens of civil engineering in India.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, Jan. 15.—The chief news of the fortnight refers to the Imperial force of drilled Chinese, and the dismissal from his command of General Burgevine, who was Ward's successor. As this incident in some measure illustrates the relations of the Ward force to the Mandarins, and shows the genius of Chinese rule, the facts of the case may be given at length. Ward's force, as it is called, has for some time been stationed at Sunkiang, holding itself in readiness for the time when a general attack upon Nanking should be deemed advisable. It was indeed reported that the force had been so ill-advised as to contemplate attacking Nanking without any further assistance, and it was supposed that an inordinate desire for loot had prompted the rash determination. It was not so, however; the seeming haste to attack Nanking was owing to the urgent pressure of the (late) Taouté of Shanghai, who, as nominal commander of the force, came under the operation of the Chinese law compelling every force drawing military pay to lose no time in proceeding to action. With native fatuity he had written to Peking, intimating in boastful language his intention of immediately attacking the Taipings in their stronghold. He was congratulated upon his intelligence, and felt bound to justify his promises. His nominal second in command, however, General Burgevine, was not prepared to throw away the lives of his men in any such rash attempt; if he did not intend doing so, the remonstrance of the British military authorities at Shanghai restrained him. The Taouté was in a different position. After promising to besiege Nanking, and continuing to draw pay for the force that was to do it, he was liable to lose his head if he remained longer inactive. With a view of stimulating Burgevine to move from Sunkiang, the pay of his troops was allowed to fall into arrears, and the usual discontent among the soldiers began to appear. After six weeks' arrears the discontent broke almost in the form of mutiny. Burgevine was told that unless the men's pay could be had at once, they would sack the town and rob the banks. Proclamations were posted up calling upon the soldiers to give no further obedience to their officers until the pay was forthcoming. Burgevine saw that a crisis was at hand, and that he had not deserved such treatment from the Chinese authorities. The money had been repeatedly promised, and at last a letter was received from the native banker at Shanghai, Ta-kee by name, saying that he apologised for past misunderstandings, and was now prepared to give the money to anyone authorised to receive it. The necessity of the moment was so urgent, that Burgevine called together his non-commissioned officers, and stated the case to them. He then immediately embarked on board the Confucius, and proceeded with a body-guard to Shanghai. The banker, Ta-kee, on Burgevine's appearance, began to abuse him, which led to recrimination; the latter, thinking he had already put up with too much, was goaded into striking the Imperial banker; he then took the dollars, which lay already packed, and returned to Sunkiang. The troops were delighted, and rushed about, calling out joyfully that they had good food. The authorities at Shanghai, however, at once issued a proclamation, deposing Burgevine from his command; they also requested the English commandant at Shanghai to appoint a successor. Colonel Jebb accordingly appointed Captain Holland to the temporary command.

From Peking the only intelligence refers to the highly amicable relations which subsist between the foreign and native authorities. A project has been conceived to have a line of railway between Tient-sin and Peking; the ordinary daily traffic is large; coal is cheap and good, if properly wrought; the country between Tient-sin and the capital is flat; and the imperial authorities are ready to give their consent to the scheme. The project will do to lie in this state for a dozen of years. From the Northern ports there is no news of consequence.

From Japan, in addition to scraps of political news that have appeared in the Yokohama newspaper, we are favoured with ponderous reports of the proceedings of a court of inquiry into the salvage in the case of the brig Guinea, wrecked in Japan. The importance this wreck has assumed in the eyes of our traders in Japan may be estimated by the fact that an extra number of the Japan Herald is frequently required to travel over the disputed ground. It seems as if our people there had had nothing to do until fate sent them this wreck to pounce upon as a common subject of contention. Meanwhile, we are told that Colonel Neale has been warned by the Mayor of Kanagawa that some new danger is imminent. The Japanese authorities are certainly indomitable as alarmists, the periodical recurrence of these warnings being now set down at three months, an assassination following every third warning. It is, perhaps, to be feared that this policy on the part of the Japanese may goad England into bold measures of hostility; but so long as the determination of the native authorities leans in its present direction, the old state of affairs will be resumed after any war we choose to make. Our rulers should give the subject their most serious attention.—Overland China Mail.

PUBLIC CONVEYANCES IN CALCUTTA.

SINCE the Queen of England has become Empress of Hindostan great efforts have been made by the British authorities to Anglicize India and Londonize Calcutta. Amongst the minor improvements partaking of an English character, is the proposed introduction of a system of cabs in place of the rickety kranchee, the poor man's hackney coach, and the old ticka gharree, or palanquin carriage, which could formerly be hired only for an entire day, or at least for half-a-day, and sometimes after a prodigious deal of bargaining and great delay, each carriage owner acting entirely with reference to his own pleasure and convenience, and not seldom refusing, in the most wilful, capricious, and provoking manner, to take any engagement at all at certain hours, or under particular conditions of distance or weather. But public conveyances and their drivers and owners in Calcutta are soon to be subjected to regulations as stringent as those which are applied to the London cab system. The Calcutta cabs are to be divided into three classes:—first, second, and third. The fee for a driver's licence is fixed at two rupees. A table of fares has not yet been drawn up, but it is supposed that six annas a-mile or twelve annas an hour will be the charge for second-class cabs, which are the ones that will be most in requisition by middle-class Europeans and well-to-do Natives. There is, apparently, an unreasonable disproportion between the time rates and the distance rates.

THE PUNJAB MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

THE Punjab Missionary Conference, of six days, must always be regarded by the religious world as an event of considerable interest, though not of great importance, for it was chiefly mere talkee, talkee; and though there was upon the whole a very Christian spirit of unity and brotherhood amongst the speakers, there was also a great diversity of opinion as to the best means of advancing their common object—the conversion of the heathen. One gentleman was in favour of having the Bible printed in the Persian character in preference to the Arabic; another advocated the Arabic; a third was in favour of the Roman character, and observed that English was already a lingua franca in India. Letters addressed in the English character, he said, were safely delivered, whereas constant mistakes occurred with letters addressed in the Persian character. The English character was the cheapest to print, and native feeling was in favour of it. The Persian character was, at least, as foreign as the Roman.

One of the speakers, the gallant and pious Sir Herbert Edwardes, read an essay, in which, after stating that all Indians were more or less polygamists, he maintained that no polygamist should be admitted into the Church by baptism. He should be required to put away all his wives but the first one, who in the eyes of God was his only true wife. He did not ignore the difficulties attendant on this question with reference to legislation, and acknowledged that the highest Indian legal authorities (Sir James Colville, Sir Charles Jackson, the late Mr. Ritchie, and others) had differed greatly on the subject, and that Lord Canning had evaded any immediate decision in council, by asking for further information from local officers all over the country. Inquiries were instituted in all directions, and the results obtained were most conflicting and perplexing. Sir Herbert Edwardes himself expressed a very decided opinion that the safest course was to abide by the Scriptures on both questions, the legal one and the religious one. The Rev. Mr. Hadow also read an essay on the same subject, in which he differed widely from Sir Herbert. He thought polygamy before conversion should be no impediment to admission into the Christian Church. Even he, however, thought a baptised convert who is a polygamist, though he should be entitled to the sacramental ordinances of the Church, should not be allowed to hold office as a minister, deacon, teacher, or catechist. The meeting generally seemed extremely unwilling to place any avoidable impediment in the way of conversion, and Sir Herbert was plied with objections and queries from all sides. Mr. Cust said he looked upon marriage as a contract, and it was a bad beginning for a man who embraced Christianity to repudiate all his former contracts. Is there no such thing, asked Sir Herbert, as an immoral contract? Mr. Cust replied that contracts founded on immemorial custom could hardly be called immoral. Major Jones asked "some very pertinent questions" regarding the case of Jacob, who married Rachel after he had already married Leah. What is to be done with a Hindoo wife who, remaining faithful to the religion of her ancestors, refuses to live with a husband (however much he may love and value her) who has separated himself from his immediate kindred and embraced the religion of the Feringhees? Mr. Cust thought that he must let his wife take her own way, bear his hard fate as well as he could, and not by any means to be allowed to remarry in the life-time of his Hindoo wife. Mr. Herron remarked that the question of polygamy was similar to that of slavery. The latter was undoubtedly in existence in Scripture times, and not positively forbidden, and such, too, was the case with respect to polygamy; and the Mormons defended their system of numerous wives by examples drawn from Biblical history.

One of the greatest difficulties with which missionaries have to contend is the obtaining of some means of procuring honourable employment for native Christians, for it is a sad thing to find that when they have been separated from their families, and deprived of their hereditary employments, they should be compelled to lead a life of entire dependence upon their Christian friends in the shape of a monthly pittance that looks too much like a charitable donation. We quite agree with those who think that until native converts can have some definite footing, and an independent home of their own, Christianity in India will continue to be but a hot-house plant. It was suggested at the Conference that the missionaries should qualify their converts for such respectable honest employment as would secure them independence; but many of them said that they had too many other engagements more directly professional to teach trades—besides, they would first need to be taught themselves. But Government might be applied to for assistance in this matter, and all native Christians might be granted free admission to any of the schools or institutions of art and science, or of general literature, already established in different parts of India. Waste lands might be granted to those native converts who would undertake to cultivate them. By not sufficiently attending to the worldly wants of the natives dependent upon them the missionaries had created a feeling of hostility towards them, which was very earnestly and loudly proclaimed on one of the earliest days of the Conference, and they had not much, we regret to say, to offer in their justification. In fact, in a spirit of Christian meekness and candour they admitted, in general terms, the truth of much that had been advanced against them, so that it is to be hoped that they will turn over a new leaf, and not confining themselves exclusively to the spiritual welfare of their flocks, endeavour to give them a more respectable, a more comfortable, a more honourable position in the eyes of the world, for at present it is not to be denied that these native Christians, as a body, are by no means much respected by any class of people. They look too much like the outcasts of all society. Both the missionaries and the Government should do their best to elevate them from so mean a condition if they wish the cause of Christian conversion to prosper in the East.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF LORD REAY.—The Right Hon. Alexander Mackay, eighth Lord Reay in the peerage of Scotland, expired at his residence in Windsor-terrace, Plymouth, on the 18th instant, at the advanced age of eighty-seven. His lordship, who was the third son of the late Hon. George Mackay, third son of the third Lord Reay, by Anne, daughter of the Hon. E. Sutherland, and grand-daughter of the third Lord Duffus, a Scottish title formerly attainted, and since regranted, though not assumed by its present possessor. The late peer, who was born in 1775, and succeeded to the honours of the peerage at his brother's death, in 1847, was for some years barrack-master at Malta. He married, in 1809, Marion, widow of David Ross, Esq., of Calcutta, and daughter of Colonel Gail, formerly private secretary to Warren Hastings, when Governor-general of India, by whom he leaves surviving issue three daughters, the Hon. Mrs. Aylmer, the Hon. Mrs. Drever, and the Hon. Elizabeth G. Mackay, and also a son, Eric, Master of Reay, who was born in 1813, and who now succeeds to the peerage as ninth baron. The Mackays, according to the "County Families," are one of the oldest and most distinguished of Highland clans, but they were not raised to the peerage until the reign of King Charles I.

SUICIDE OF AN EAST INDIAN MERCHANT.—Dr. Lancaster held an inquest on Saturday, at No. 72, Kensington-gardens-square, on the body of Mr. Frederick Matthey, aged forty-one, the late proprietor of that mansion, and an East India merchant, who destroyed himself by leaping from one of the upper windows of his house, on the morning of Wednesday week. Mr. C. Matthey, brother of the deceased, said he saw him last alive on Tuesday, when he seemed very much depressed on account of some business speculations he had entered into. He had been unable to sleep; and on Sunday, the 15th, he became so much depressed that it was deemed necessary to send for Dr. Vinning, the family attendant, who prescribed for him. The evidence of Ellen Mency, Caroline Miller (servants to deceased), and other witnesses, went to show that on Wednesday morning Mrs. Matthey suddenly missed him from her bed-room, and on inquiring of the servants whether they had seen anything of their master, they replied in the negative. A search, however, took place, and on going into the backyard the body of the deceased was found lying on the flag-stones; blood had issued from the nose and ears. Dr. Taylor, of the Queen's-road, Bayswater, was sent for, and pronounced life extinct. Dr. Vinning gave it as his opinion, from the interview he had with deceased on the previous Sunday, that he was in that state of mind to be almost unaccountable for his actions; and Dr. Taylor deposed that death had resulted from fracture of the base of the skull, no doubt caused by the fall from the window. The jury returned a verdict of "Temporary insanity."

LOSS OF ANOTHER INDIAN STEAMER.—Intelligence has been received at Lloyd's from their agent at Alexandria communicating the loss of another steamer belonging to the British India Steam Navigation Company, called the Burmah, 777 gross tonnage, which appears to have taken place on the 21st of last month, on the coast of Pullicat, to the northward of Madras. The telegram states that the steamer left Madras on the previous day for Negapatam, with passengers and a general cargo, and her going ashore at the place mentioned is attributed to a strong current setting in towards the coast. It is feared she will become a wreck. The Burmah was an iron-built steamer, 229 ft. long, 29 ft. beam, and 26 ft. depth in hold; her engines 160-horse power. She was built at Greenock in 1858, under special survey, and was classed in Lloyd's register as A 1 for twelve years.

INDIAN PRIZE-MONEYS.—Since the day when Sir Robert Walpole's Government were defeated in Parliament, in their attempt to partly appropriate prize-money to the expenses of the war, few questions of the kind have engaged a larger share of public interest than the division of the Banda and Kirwee booty, which has now been under the consideration of the authorities for several years. The troops under Sir George Whitlock have certainly some reason to complain of the long delay which has occurred, as they have not as yet realised a shilling of prize-money. The force from the Western Presidency, commanded at first by Brigadier Stuart, and afterwards by Sir Hugh Rose, has been more fortunate. The prize of Dhar has been distributed a few months back to those troops only which were present at the capture. The treasure of Jhansi oozed away before division. The booty of Banda and Kirwee has not been divided, because the Bombay troops have claimed to share in this, in addition to their own captures. They urge that their division, and that which Sir George Whitlock commanded, were in some sense, either in fact or in intention, associated, that no single division could have achieved its successes single-handed, and that these victories had some effect in intimidating and causing the surrender of the Chief of Kirwee. On the other hand, the Madras troops contend that the plea of association is disproved, that Whitlock held an independent command, that the advance upon Kirwee was made under the personal orders of Lord Canning, that the operations of the two columns were not only in distant territories, but essentially distinct, and the Madras column was not leaning on the Bombay force in any sense of the term. These points, however, have all, we believe, been submitted for the judgment of the law officers of the Crown, and we have reason to expect that the Government will soon pronounce in accordance with their opinion.—Spectator.

DEATH OF COLONEL ROBERT RAMSAY.—We have to record the death of Colonel Robert Ramsay, late Lieutenant-Colonel of the 74th regiment of Bengal Native Infantry, and Deputy Military Auditor-General at Calcutta. The gallant officer, who was 59 years of age, died at Ipswich, on Saturday last. His commissions bear date as ensign, Jan. 8, 1825; lieutenant, Dec. 9, 1825; brevet-captain, Jan. 8, 1840; captain, March 17, 1841; brevet-major, Nov. 11, 1851; major, July 14, 1853; and lieutenant-colonel, Nov. 18, 1857.

COLONIAL MILITARY CHARGES.—The Army Estimates include charges amounting to £3,020,526 for military purposes in the colonies, exclusive of the cost of arms, accoutrements, and barrack, hospital, and other stores to be supplied from this country. But rather more than a fourth of this charge is incurred in respect of the Mediterranean and other stations not properly colonies. The year's expense in respect of Canada is estimated at £702,115, and in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, £180,695; the West Indies, £291,525; New Zealand, £347,209; China and Hong Kong, £334,789; West Coast of Africa, £77,438; Labuan, £4,500; Western Australia, £28,368. From all these colonies no repayment is expected. The cost for the Cape of Good Hope is put at £200,384; and Natal, £50,693, but they will contribute £13,500 in aid of the extra allowances of the troops. For New South Wales and Queensland the charge is £28,140; for Victoria, £24,767; for Tasmania, £30,214; and for South Australia, £6,829. New South Wales and Victoria pay the expense of one battery of garrison artillery, and these Australian colonies pay special allowances to the troops, but the amount of these is at present under discussion; New South Wales and South Australia also defray the cost of barrack buildings. The charge for the Mauritius is £150,995, and for Ceylon, £89,534, but the former contributes £10,000, and the latter £24,000, and both make allowances to the officers, Ceylon also bearing its commissariat charges and expense of barrack buildings.

EAST INDIA REVENUES.—A return was issued on Tuesday of all stocks, loans, debts, and liabilities chargeable on the East India revenues at home and abroad, up to the latest period of time to which such return can be made out, viz.:—England, Dec. 31, 1862; India, April 30, 1861. The return for England is as follows:—East India Bonds, £3,640,017; East India Debentures, £13,003,000; India Five per Cent. Stock, £15,720,100; owing for exports, £55,761; War office demands, Admiralty claims, &c., £326,129; capital of Indian railways and other guaranteed companies remaining in the home treasury, after deducting sums (partly estimated) drawn by them in India, £3,007,946; bills of exchange, £2,331; miscellaneous, £322,725; total, £36,077,902. The similar return for India is as follows:—The return distinguishes the amounts for the various presidencies, but we take the totals for the whole of India. Registered debt, £62,307,028; loans, £2,502,736; Treasury notes, £1,364,695; service funds, £3,453,891; bills payable, £3,581,838; deposits and miscellaneous, £11,257,880; total, £80,467,963.

AGRA AND UNITED SERVICE BANK.—At the half-yearly meeting on Tuesday of the Agra and United Service Bank, a dividend at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, together with a bonus of £1 per share, were ordered to be paid, making a total distribution of twelve per cent. for the past twelve months.

ADVICE TO OFFICERS IN INDIA.

By JOHN MCCOSH, M.D., late of the Bengal Medical Staff.

"To young officers going out to India, Dr. McCosh tenders the most salutary advice."—Leader.

"He is well qualified to be a mentor to the uninitiated."—United Service Magazine.

"He is always a firm, friendly, and practical adviser."—Edinburgh Courant.

"On all matters handled in it, the young officer may gain some valuable hints."—Athenaeum.

"The work is a little encyclopaedia of information on miscellaneous subjects."—Edinburgh Medical Journal.

MESSRS. WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN INQUIRY into the THEORIES of HISTORY.—CHANCE, LAW, WILL, with Special Reference to the Principles of the Positive Philosophy. 8vo cloth, 15s.

"This is both an able and an interesting book; for the writer, while an accurate and in some respects an original thinker, has also the command of a clear and animated style. The general scope of the book is the refutation of that naked positivism of which M. Comte is the apostle. . . . Of the whole work we can confidently say that it is one to be read by every man interested in these questions. It is a weighty treatise, and an important contribution to philosophy."—The Press, August 16, 1862.

"Written to combat certain opinions which have lately been gaining ground with some classes of thinkers, this treatise is well-timed. With no more boldness than is proper, the author claims that the views of wise men in former ages shall not be disregarded without good reason, and that nothing new and improved shall be accepted simply because of its impudence. His own language throughout is moderate and logical. A Conservative on principle, it is a part of his conservative belief in the steady progress of mankind to seek for the development of new thoughts in every age of human history, and ready to accept all that bears the stamp of truth. In a book full of argument, and occupying just that border-land of metaphysics which is harder to tread than the defined circle of metaphysics itself, it would be easy to discover discrepancies of thought and contradictions of terms; but the faults are few, and the merits many."—Examiner, Aug. 16, 1862.

A SHORT TRIP in HUNGARY and TRANSYLVANIA in the SPRING of 1862. By Professor D. T. ANSTED. Post 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Professor Ansted's descriptions are written with a neatness attesting the accuracy of a scientific observer's eyes. His volume is one both of value and entertainment: a book calculated to turn the thoughts of tourists down the Danube."—Athenæum, Aug. 16, 1862.

"Many a tourist this autumn will have cause to thank Professor Ansted for introducing them to a new and comparatively unknown country. . . . It would be difficult to find a more agreeable companion for a tour than the author of this interesting volume."—The Press, Aug. 9, 1862.

THE SCIENCE of HOME LIFE.

By ALBERT J. BERNAYS, Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, and of Practical Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital Medical and Surgical College (late Lecturer on Chemistry and Practical Chemistry at St. Mary's Hospital), &c., &c. Illustrated by several cuts. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MEMORABLE EVENTS of MODERN HISTORY. By J. G. EDGAR. Author of the "Boyhood of Great Men," &c., &c. With Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A practical writer, with a high sense of his obligations as an instructor of children. Mr. J. G. Edgar never makes a contribution to juvenile literature that does not deserve a certain measure of commendation. We can conscientiously recommend it ('Memorable Events') as a work at the same time entertaining and useful."—Athenæum, March 6, 1862.

"Mr. Edgar's style is clear, vigorous, simple, and unaffected, and from the first page to the last the reader is instinctively conscious of standing in the presence of a gentleman and a scholar. Though writing for the benefit of the rising generation Mr. Edgar possesses the enviable talent of attracting at the same time the attention of young men and grey-heads, and of so describing events as to suggest many a topic for grave reflection. His last ('Memorable Events') is certainly not his least work, and not only confirms but enhances his previous reputation as an earnest, agreeable, high-minded, and reliable chronicler of human achievements and human follies and failures."—Spectator.

"A most acceptable present for the youth of both sexes."—Observer.

THE FORESTS and GARDENS of SOUTH INDIA. By HUGH CLEGGHORN, M.D., F.L.S., Conservator of Forests, Madras Presidency. Post 8vo., with Illustrations, price 12s.

"Full of valuable information and thoroughly reliable in all its statements."—Daily News.

THE HISTORY of CHESS: from the Time of the Early Invention of the Game in India till the Period of its Establishment in Western and Central Europe. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., 8vo, cloth, 15s.

"This volume will be a welcome addition to the library of every lover of the noble game of chess. Our author makes a stout fight for the Hindus as the inventors of the game, and adduces many cogent proofs in support of his opinion. He shows how the game is played in other countries, how it has been modified both in the names of the pieces and the names of the game by the peculiarities of the country or the national temperament of the inhabitants; and then traces the steps by which it has arrived at its present place of honour in civilized and intellectual Europe. The book is, therefore, full of curious lore that is on other and higher subjects than chess-playing, for it involves dissertations on ethnology, comparative zoology, the dispersion and settlement of nations, and the manners and customs of different countries, to a degree that would not be at all anticipated by a person who contented himself by reading the title-page. All this information is given, not in any dry, repulsive, or even technical style, but easily, clearly, and in an animated manner—the style that would naturally be adopted by a gentleman and man of the world."—Herald.

SIN: its Causes and Consequences. An Attempt to Investigate the Origin, Nature, Extent, and Results of Moral Evil. A Series of Lent Lectures. By the Rev. HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"These lectures are learned, eloquent, and earnest, and though they approach the 'limits of religious thought,' they do not transgress those limits; and they present the reader with a comprehensive review, based upon revelation, of the nature, extent, and consequences of moral evil or sin, both in this world and in the world to come."—Civil Service Gazette.

A COURSE of ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS, for the Use of Candidates for Admission into either of the Military Colleges; of Applicants for Appointments in the Home or Indian Civil Service; and of Mathematical Students generally. 2nd Edition. In one closely printed 8vo. volume. Pp. 648. Price 12s.

"In the work before us he has digested a complete Elementary Course by aid of his long experience as a teacher and a writer; and he has produced a very useful book. . . . Mr. Young has not allowed his own tastes to rule the distribution, but has adjusted his parts with the skill of a veteran."—Athenæum, March 9, 1861.

"Mr. Young is well-known as the author of undoubtedly the best treatise on the 'Theory of Equations' which is to be found in our language—a treatise distinguished by originality of thought, great learning, and admirable perspicuity. Nor are these qualities wanting in the work which we are reviewing. . . . Considering the difficulty of the task which Mr. Young has undertaken to discharge, and the extent of useful knowledge he has succeeded in imparting accurately and lucidly in so small a compass, we can without hesitation commend this work to the public as by far the best elementary course of mathematics in our language."—The London Review, April 6, 1861.

THE RUSSIANS at HOME: Unpolitical

Sketches, showing what Newspapers they read; what Theatres they frequent; and how they Eat, Drink, and Enjoy themselves; with other matter relating chiefly to Literature, Music, and to Places of Historical and Religious Interest in and about Moscow. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Esq. 2nd Edition, with Illustrations. Price 10s. 6d.

"It is a book that we can sincerely recommend, not only to those who are desirous of abundant and reliable information respecting the social economy of the Russian people, but to those who seek an entertaining volume, that may be perused in any part with both profit and amusement."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"This is not only one of the most amusing books that we have read for a long time, but also the best and most reliable account of Russian life and manners which has hitherto been given to the public."—Spectator.

"The tone is so genial, the descriptions are so vigorously touched, and the author's perfect acquaintance with his subject is so marked throughout, that his sketches are sure to delight any one into whose hands they may fall."—Literary Gazette.

HISTORY of the BRITISH EMPIRE in INDIA, by EDWARD THORNTON, Esq., containing a copious Glossary of Indian Terms, and a complete chronological Index of Events. The whole in one closely-printed 8vo. volume, price 12s.

Students who have to pass an examination on the History of India will find Mr. Thornton's the best and cheapest volume to consult, for whilst it is a complete and comprehensive History, the style is lively and interesting, a great contrast with all other Histories of India.

A GAZETTEER of INDIA compiled from

Documents at the India-office, and other official returns made in India. By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq. In one large closely-printed 8vo volume, with Map, price £1. 1s.

Work in four vols. 8vo, with Maps showing the acquisitions of the British at various periods. Notes, and marginal References, may still be had, price £2. 16s.

THE INDIAN ARMY and CIVIL SERVICE LIST for January, 1863. Issued by order of the Secretary of State for India. 12mo, sewed, 6s., or by post, 6s. 6d.; bound copies, 7s. 6d.; or by post, 8s.

The Indian Army and Civil Service List is issued on the 1st January and 1st July in each year.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MISS CORNELIA KNIGHT, Lady Companion to the Princess

Charlotte of Wales, with Extracts from her Journals and Anecdote Books. Fourth Edition, 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, £1. 6s.

"Why we should turn to these volumes as among the most interesting of the recent season, will be sufficiently evident as we indicate their contents."—Times.

"Of the popularity of these volumes, on account of their historical as well as gossiping merits, there can be no doubt whatever."—Athenæum.

THE HISTORY of the OPERA, from

MONTEBERDE to DONIZETTI. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Second Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, price £1. 1s.

"Completely master of his subject, and possessing a ready and pleasing pen, Mr. Edwards in these volumes gives us an exceedingly interesting history of operatic performances."—Herald.

"It is one of those treasures of amusing anecdote that may be taken up and laid down at a minute's notice."—Times.

THE REPUBLIC of FOOLS: being the History of the State and People of Abdera in Thrace. Translated from the German of C. M. von Wieland. By the Rev. H. CHRISTMAS. 2 vols., post 8vo., cloth, 18s.

"As a prose satire, 'The History of the Abderites' yields only in breadth of humour, and pungency of wit, to Dean Swift's immortal travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver and of works of that class we know of none in any language that can compare with either of the two."—Observer.

"There is enjoyment for many a Christmas to come, for many thousands of English boys, and many thousands of English men and women. Unfortunately for the world Pisistratus Caxton departed this life without having made any contribution towards the great history of human folly, save, indeed, by the records of his own. Mr. Christmas has given us something even better in his translation of 'Wieland's Abderites': and in the simplest, most racy, and vernacular English, has enriched our literature with another character of the family dear to mankind, of the Quixotes, Gullivers, and other human foils of human self-love and vanity. If the addition to our shelves of a book to delight the young and instruct the old overflowing with wit, fun, drollery inexpressible, wisdom depth, and knowledge is an achievement deserving of national thanks, we undertake to convey our share to Mr. Christmas, fearing only lest we should not have thanked him sufficiently."—London Review.

THE CODE of CRIMINAL PROCEDURE:

An Act passed by the Legislative Council of India on the 5th September, 1861. 8vo., cloth, 10s. 6d.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

FIRE! THIEVES! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Clintwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morison, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGES)

ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alternative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medica Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridges's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess to be, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridges and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE OF QUINIDINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridger, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

CORYZINE.—This invaluable, non-sternu-tative POWDER, employed like Snuff, affords instantaneous relief in incipient cases of cold, influenza or Coryza, the sense of suffocation with excessive secretion supervening, being in both cases effectually removed. To those subject to this distressing complaint it is confidently recommended as a sure remedy.

Sold in Boxes at 1s. 13d. and 3s. 9d.; post free, 1s. 3d. and 3s. 1d. in stamps, by MARSHALL and MELLIN, English and Foreign Chemists, 16, Tichborne-street, opposite the County Fire Office, Regent-street.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 13d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

EFFECTS OF COLD.—In many periods of the year almost every current of air is pregnant with sore throats, influenza, and a similar host of disorders. All may be readily subdued by rubbing Holloway's Ointment externally over the affected parts, which quickly penetrates any diseased or disordered part of the body; and whatever or wherever the seat or nature of the malady may be, searches out its cause, and safely effects the precise remedial action required, without weakening the system, or leaving behind any particle of the disease. Holloway's Pills greatly assist this curative action. The sick of all nations have voluntarily borne testimony to the extraordinary cures performed by these medicaments.

Now ready, price 6s., or by post, 6s. 6d.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAFTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nafel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Kerpsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 14th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

The Governor-general was to leave Calcutta for the Upper Province on the 5th of March, and great preparations were being made for his departure.

Addresses have rained down upon Sir Charles Trevelyan in great abundance. Three representative associations in Calcutta have welcomed him warmly, and expressed their confidence in his ability and good intentions—the Chamber of Commerce, the British India Association, and the Trades' Association. The addresses and replies will be found at full length in another column.

Sir Charles Trevelyan was robbed of every article of value, in the shape of plate and jewellery, while he and his lady were at the Government-house fancy ball. Sir Charles is now very busily engaged in visiting all the public departments in Calcutta.

It is very generally understood in India that Sir Charles Trevelyan will try to abolish the Income-tax, which is peculiarly odious to the natives of India, who are never disposed to reveal the exact amount of their pecuniary property even to their most intimate friends.

It is now settled that Allahabad is to be the seat of Government of the North-west Provinces. We give a prominent place to the despatch on this subject from Sir Charles Wood.

Jan. 19.—No. 355.—The following despatch from the Secretary of State for India is published for general information:—

No. 45 of 1862.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HON. THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

India-office, London, Nov. 29, 1862.

My Lord,—I have had before me in Council your letter No. 58 of Sept. 5 last, and its enclosures, regarding the proposed construction of public buildings at Allahabad, in consequence of the removal thither of the seat of Government of the North-west Provinces.

2. Capt. Peile, Executive Engineer at Allahabad, has been instructed to prepare revised designs without loss of time, taking care to keep the estimated outlay within sixteen lakhs of rupees. For this sum it is expected that the office establishments of all the Civil Departments of Government may be located in substantial, commodious, and handsome buildings, arranged so as to allow of easy communication with each other, and with Government House, which last edifice is to be provided for by a separate estimate.

3. I approve the orders which you have given.—I have, &c., C. Wood.

By order of his Honour the Lieut.-governor, North-western Provinces.

W. E. MORRIS, Lieut.-col., Sec. to Govt., N.W.P., Public Works Dept.

THE Indian papers assert that the new rules for the uncovenanted service were known in India, and give particulars as to the retiring pensions. We more than doubt their accuracy; and believe we shall not be far from correct when we say that the new rules provide for the retirement of members of the uncovenanted service are very nearly as follows, viz.:—After fifteen years' service, on medical certificate of incapacity, one-third of salary, provided it does not exceed Rs. 3,000 per annum; after twenty-five years' service on medical certificate one-half of salary, provided that it does not exceed Rs. 5,000 per annum; but after thirty years' service the medical certificate is dispensed with, the pension being Rs. 5,000, or half salary if less than Rs. 5,000.

On the 7th a grand dinner was to be given at Benares by the East India Railway Company to commemorate the opening of the line in that city. The Viceroy was to be present.

All sorts of speculations appear in the Anglo-Indian papers respecting the Indian Medical Service, and all, we think, are more or less erroneous.

We have some reason to believe that it will not be long before the new and final measures to be adopted respecting the Indian Medical Service will be made known in India. The present Indian Medical Service will, in all probability, be declared part of the British Medical Service; but they will not be liable to be sent anywhere on service out of India, except with their own free consent. They will have a preference claim to all appointments with the native army, and to all medical-civil appointments. No new appointments to the Indian Medical Service will be made; the present service, as a separate body, will therefore gradually pass away or die out. The present rules respecting the retiring pensions will, probably, not be materially altered.

An Irishman, of the name of Denis Hely, after having been detained in custody for some months on the charge of murder, after a three days' trial has been acquitted without being called upon for his defence. This case has excited much public attention in India amongst both natives and Europeans. It appears that in Nov., 1861, on a Sunderbund estate, called Morellunge, of which, under the owners, Messrs. Morell and Co., Mr. Hely was the chief superintendent, some misunderstanding had arisen between the ryots of Morellunge and those of a neighbouring property in the village of Boorackally. Mr. Hely accompanied his own people. In the fray that ensued a native of the name of Robewoolah was wounded, first in the leg, and afterwards in the breast, the latter shot proving fatal. A score of natives swore that Mr. Hely took deliberate aim at the unfortunate Robewoolah through a breach in a matted enclosure, within which the man was quietly seated. Some witnesses swore that he shot Robewoolah with a doubled-barrelled gun others swore that it was with a musket with a bayonet attached. One man asserted, in the spirit of Falstaff, that he saw the Sahib very distinctly in the morning light, but it was so dark that he could not see whether he carried a gun. For it was so dark, Hal, that you could not see your hand. One witness swore that in his fright he had lost his senses, and another said, "I am an illiterate man, and how can I tell what happened so long ago?"—which is in the style of the non mi recordo of the witness on Queen Caroline's trial. The jury saw at once that no man's life ought to be sacrificed on such testimony as that of the native witnesses against Denis Hely, and at the close of the prosecution said they did not require the prisoner's counsel to proceed with the defence. Mr. Hely had distinguished himself greatly by his gallantry at the time of the mutiny; but on hearing of the charges against him by so many witnesses he took fright and ran away from his employers, and concealed himself for some time, and when he was at last captured he was so reduced in spirit by severe sufferings that he burst into tears. The native newspapers are fiercely opposed to him, and contend that he has been permitted to escape the clutches of the law merely because he is a white man; and that no European cares anything for the destruction of a black one. The editors of the English papers in India take a different view of the matter, and dilate upon the perjury and corruption of native witnesses.

The accounts from the North-east frontier continue to be very unsatisfactory, and the disaffection seems to be spreading. It is feared that the revolt will not be suppressed before the commencement of the rains.

The labours of the Calcutta Commissariat Commission have been brought to a close. The inquiry has cost the Government about a lac of rupees. It has ended in a triumph for the Commissariat Department. All the suspicions and grave rumours against it are pronounced unjust and unfounded.

It appears that Prince Gholam Mahomed, the grandson of Hyder, has announced an "at home," to which he invites the members of the Calcutta community to meet the Governor-general and Lady Elgin. Some of the local papers are indignant at his presumption. We are not told whether the Governor-general and his lady have accepted the invitation. The Calcutta Englishman is especially severe upon his Highness; and, in fact, goes so far beyond ordinary limits in its criticism upon the Mysore family, that we should not be at all surprised to learn that the Prince had commenced an action for libel against that paper. Of the truth or untruth of the charges against these princes we offer no opinion.

The British India Company's steamer Burmah is said to be totally lost about forty miles north of Madras. No lives were lost, but no part of the cargo was saved. The passengers reached Madras in the ship's boat. H.M.S. Sydney had been despatched in vain to the assistance of the distressed vessel.

The Governor of Bombay was still at the Presidency; but Lady Frere, it is said, is about to return to England for a year.

There is a rumour in India that Sir Robert Napier is to be nominated Secretary at War, and that the office of the Commander-in-Chief is to be abolished, and a separate commander appointed for each Presidency. This would be a way to get rid of Sir Hugh Rose without a recall; but there is not the least foundation for the rumour.

Sir William Mansfield was at Nusserabad on the 28th of January.

The Bishop of Calcutta consecrated the Memorial at Cawnpore on the 11th of February, in the presence of the Viceroy.

The Thakore of Bhownager has sent 10,000 rupees to the Bombay Government as a contribution to the Lancashire Relief Fund.

The rebel leader, Desput Sing, has been slain in Central India by a party of sepoys after a desperate resistance. In the struggle he is said to have slain six men with his own hand.

The Jynteah rebel chief has been tried by martial law, and sentenced to death.

Government has strongly recommended all newly-appointed chaplains to study the native languages, and they are encouraged by promises of pecuniary reward.

The contract for the Delhi Railway has been given to Sir Morton Peto and Co.

There are some most elaborate attacks in the Indian newspapers, especially in the Times of India, on the character of the Peninsular and Oriental Company. The accuracy of their accounts is very severely called in question.

BENGAL.

ADDRESSES TO SIR C. TREVELYAN.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

At noon, on the 27th of January, Sir Charles Trevelyan was received by a deputation of the Members of the Chamber of Commerce at their Chamber, when after a few preliminary remarks, the President, Mr. J. N. Bullen, read the following address:—

BENGAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Calcutta, 27th Jan., 1863.

TO THE HON. SIR C. E. TREVELYAN, K.C.B., Member of the Council of the Governor-general of India.

HON. SIR,—The Bengal Chamber of Commerce desire, on your arrival in Calcutta, to offer you their congratulations on your appointment as a Member of the Council of the Governor-general.

2. Advocating, as they invariably have done, the policy of entrusting the Department of Finance to a statesman whose administrative experience has been acquired in the conduct of public business in England, the Chamber of Commerce regard with satisfaction this further recognition of that policy, and an appointment by which, on the regretted resignation of Mr. Laing, the high responsibilities of that office are committed to one so eminently qualified as yourself to exercise them for the public good.

3. Though, happily, the finances of the empire are now restored to a sound and prosperous condition, and the necessity for devising new taxation no longer exists, much remains to be done in perfecting the reforms inaugurated by your two immediate predecessors, which requires the controlling supervision of an experienced financier.

4. Should the progressive improvement which, it is believed, is taking place in the financial position of the State enable you to recommend to his Excellency, the Governor-general in Council any reductions in the taxation imposed during the last few years, the Chamber of Commerce feel confident that you will impartially weigh the claims of all classes, and administer relief where it may appear to be most needed.

5. All measures having for their object the development of the commerce of the country, and the legitimate encouragement of enterprise in promoting its agricultural industry, will, the Chamber feels sure, have your warm advocacy.

6. The Chamber are equally sure that all well considered schemes for public works, whether to be undertaken by the State or by private capitalists, will have your hearty support.

7. In conclusion, the Chamber desire to repeat the assurance, conveyed in similar addresses to your two predecessors, of the gratification it will at all times afford them to communicate with you personally, whenever it may seem desirable to you to avail yourself in that way of the practical experience of any of their number.—We have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient faithful servants, for the Bengal Chamber of Commerce,

JOHN N. BULLEN, President.

WILLIAM MAITLAND, Vice-President.

In reply, Sir Charles said—

GENTLEMEN,—I accept with pleasure the congratulations you have so kindly offered me on my appointment to the Council of the Governor-general.

The assurance you give me that you regard my appointment with satisfaction, and that you will be at all times ready to give me the advantage of the practical experience of any of your number, is gratifying and encouraging to me. The interests of the Government are identical with those of commerce, and this truth will, I hope, be exemplified in our cordial co-operation.

You justly remark that the main work of the restoration of the finances of India has been already accomplished by my two immediate predecessors—the organic changes have been made, and what remains for me is the humble but useful task of perfecting these great improvements, and of carrying the well-tried principles of English finance through every department of income and expenditure. If this good work receives the support I expect it will, Anglo-Indian finance will soon settle down into a well-regulated system, requiring only ordinary care to maintain it in an efficient state, and Anglo-Indian credit will be placed in the high position to which it is entitled by the substantial foundation on which it rests.

But, gentlemen, the limits of what can be accomplished by the best financial arrangements are much narrower than is generally supposed. The fund at our disposal for works of improvement is only what can be spared out of the produce of the taxes after providing for the primary objects of Government. The agency at our disposal is confined to what can be directed and superintended by a single head. The hands of the Anglo-Indian Government have not been "torpid," but they have been overburdened; and the popular aspiration by which every desired object is sought to be obtained by an indefinite development of the Department of Public Works is a pure delusion.

You have, therefore, properly adverted to the great importance of calling the principle of private enterprise to the aid of the principal of Government administrations. The inexhaustible capital and the multiform agency of England are elements of enormous power; and when India shall have been once fully accepted as a field for English investment and English activity, she will enter upon a new career, the future of which I do not venture to predict. Lord Elgin's Government adopted from the first this policy, and measures have been already commenced in this sense which it will be my duty to explain at the proper time.

Let us pray that God may give us all the blessing of united counsels, and that future generations may have no reason to be ashamed of any of the men who guided the destinies of India through the great crisis of her affairs.

THE BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION.

On the 27th of January, at noon, Sir Charles Trevelyan received at his residence a deputation from the British Indian Association. After the exchange of a few complimentary expressions between Sir Charles and the gentlemen of the deputation, Rajah Radhakant Bahadoor, the President of the Association, read the following address, prefacing it by observing:—

HON. SIR,—As President of the British Indian Association, I respectfully beg leave to discharge my duty of reading this welcome address from our society. I thank the great Dispenser of all events, who has preserved my life so long, to have the honour of performing this highly pleasing task towards one whose early career I had witnessed with admiration, and whom I beheld again a matured statesman crowned with years and fame, and entrusted with one of the highest functions of the State.

TO THE HON. SIR C. E. TREVELYAN, K.C.B., Ordinary Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, &c., &c., &c.

HON. SIR,—We, the members of the British Indian Association meeting in this metropolis, representing various classes and interests of the Native Indian Community, crave leave to tender you, on behalf of the Association, our respectful and cordial welcome upon your return to this city, and to express the gratification we feel at your assumption of the important office of financial member of the Government of India.

Your past career in this country, marked as it was by singular ability, untiring zeal, and earnest desire for reform, and a keen appreciation of, and thorough sympathy with, the wants, wishes and feelings of the native population so signally exhibited in your brief but beneficent administration of Madras, is associated in the minds of our countrymen with the memory of services which will not be soon obliterated.

Since the time you quitted this part of the country there have been momentous changes in the system of administration and the condition of the people. Those of us who remember your early Indian career have not forgotten the important part you took in those times in furthering the cause of native advancement under the beneficent influence of the presiding genius of those days, the great and good Lord William Bentinck, a name which will ever remain engraved in the hearts of the natives.

Your broad and enlightened views regarding public policy, finance, taxation, and administration of the country generally, tested and matured by long and varied experience, are too well known, sir, to call for special remark. These will, we are persuaded, find a legitimate field and an ample scope for operation in the Supreme Council of India. Under your able guidance of the Finance Department, aided by other members of the administration, particularly its illustrious chief, the country will, we feel confident, experience a material and financial prosperity, such as not only to allow it relief from extraordinary and oppressive taxation, but to give the utmost freedom of action for improvement and reform in all branches of the State, and thereby to secure the happiness and contentment of the teeming millions of the Empire.

Occasions frequently arise when we feel it our duty to approach the Government with our humble suggestions and solicitations on questions intimately affecting the wants, wishes and feelings of the native Indian population; and we earnestly solicit, for such representations, your kind and indulgent consideration as a member of the Administration.—We have the honour to be, hon. sir, your most obedient servants,

(Sig.) RAJAH RADHAKANT BAHADOOR,

President, on behalf of the Association.

British Indian Association Rooms, No. 1, Lar-kin's lane, Jan. 27, 1863.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, before reading the reply, observed that it was a solemn thing for him to receive this address from the native community, among whom he had spent some of the happiest days of his early manhood. Many of those with whom he was connected before in official and friendly relations have passed away, but he saw among the gentlemen of the deputation two gentlemen (pointing to Rajahs Radhakant and Kalikrishna) who formed the connecting link between the past and present generations. He thanked God for giving him health and energy to devote to the service of India. He then read the following reply:—

MY FRIENDS,—I sincerely thank you for the cordial manner in which you have welcomed me back to India after an absence of twenty-five years.

Your partial kindness has greatly overrated my merits, but this qualification I will not deny, that I have a true affection for your country, and strong sympathies with both the great races, English and native, which possess it.

I have now to make the acquaintance of a new generation. A very few familiar faces remind me that we lived with Bentinck, Metcalfe, Ramnath Rai, Dwarkanath Thakur, Horace Haymen Wilson, James Prinsep, David Hare, and other remarkable men of that day. May God enable me to combine this knowledge of the past with a just appreciation of the wants of the present, so that I may duly perform what remains for me to do.

The confidence you express in Lord Elgin's Government is not misplaced. It is a great satisfaction to me to be able to take a subordinate part in an administration which has the interests of all classes entirely at heart.

The position you hold as representing the wishes and feelings of a large portion of the population of Lower Bengal is certain always to obtain a respectful and attentive consideration of any representations you may think proper to submit. For my own part, it will always gratify me to confer freely with you about any matter in which you are interested.

After some observations on the subject of popular education, the deputation retired.

THE TRADE ASSOCIATION.

The members of the Calcutta Trades' Association waited upon the Hon. Sir C. Trevelyan yesterday at twelve o'clock, and having met with a cordial reception from the Minister, the Master, Mr. F. Jennings, read the following address:—To the Hon. Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India.

HON. SIR,—As the representatives of a large section of the community, we are anxious to give expression to our gratification at your appointment to the important position of Financial Minister for India. Your long connection with this empire, and the prominent position previously held by you in this presidency, and subsequently as Governor of Madras, afford us strong grounds for the confidence felt by all that the interests of India will continue to be as heretofore, the paramount aim of your administration. Whilst placing the highest value on the important services rendered to this Government by your predecessors in office, we feel, sir, that however great the improvement in our finances, the empire is as yet only entering upon the vast progression of which it is capable, and we rejoice that our Gracious Queen has made choice of a statesman whose public career, marked in the past by a wise, liberal, and comprehensive policy, gives the best guarantee for the continuance of that policy so necessary in the rapid development of enterprise and industrial arts now taking place around us.

The community which we represent have ever cheerfully borne the taxation which Government has thought necessary to impose upon it; however heavy and direct those imposts may have been, feeling sure that they would be continued only so long as the exigencies of the State demanded.

As citizens of the capital of India, we feel especial gratification in welcoming you to Calcutta, knowing well how efficient and beneficial has been your action in municipal matters in the sister Presidency; and at this time, when the Bengal Government have this subject before them, we are sure your counsel will not be wanting in suggesting measures for the improvement of this city.

We earnestly desire for you, health, and the encouragement of full success to sustain you in the arduous duties of office; assured, that from your proved energy and wide experience will result such measures as will strengthen and secure the good government of India, and promote the civilisation and true happiness, as well as add to the wealth and material prosperity of the people.

For the Committee and Members of the Calcutta Trades' Association,

F. JENNINGS, Master.

Sir Charles replied as follows:—

GENTLEMEN,—I accept with gratitude the expressions of personal kindness and confidence with which you have honoured me, but the expectations you have formed of what may be accomplished by me for the public good give me real uneasiness. My position is not what my predecessor's was. In their case circumstances were urgent, and it was generally felt that the salvation of the State depended upon a trusting acquiescence in their proposals. Now the crisis has passed, and ordinary feelings have resumed their influence, the interest which each individual has in the public good too often seems to him small, compared with any personal sacrifices he may be called upon to make. To many a zealous public officer the maximum efficiency of his own department is the paramount consideration, without regard to cost, while other departments are pointed out by him as proper subjects of economy.

Nevertheless, I have great faith in the good sense and public spirit of Englishmen. We are all interested in the suppression of useless expenditure, and in the firm establishment of an orderly and well-regulated administrative system, because it is important to us all that the resources and credit of the State should be on an undeniably high footing, and that we should have a sufficiently large surplus to be able to do real good. To obtain a useful result all must co-operate, and then all will benefit.

You dwell with affection on Calcutta, its projected improvements and the development of its municipal administration. Gentlemen, your city is deserving of all the pains that can be bestowed on it. Having visited many celebrated places during my long absence, I was proud to find on my return that Calcutta does not suffer by a comparison with any of them. The European portion of the city was originally laid out according to a comprehensive, noble plan, which has of late years been embellished by the addition of many handsome houses, and by long lines of brilliant gas-lights.

But there are several desiderata: the first of these is a system of sewerage, in which a beginning has been made; the next is the quaying of the rivers; and, considering the great trade carried on by the Hooghly, and the remarkable facilities for the alignment of its banks, it is surprising that nothing has yet been done.

But the great object of all, which comprehends and subverts almost every other, is the promotion of a proper municipal organisation. It would be a waste of time to recapitulate the manifold advantages of such institutions, or to explain how much of her present advanced position Europe owes to them. In my opinion Calcutta contains social elements which, properly handled, might be formed into a municipality which would be an example and model of self-government to the rest of India.

After some further conversation with several of the members, the deputation withdrew.—Englishman, Jan. 30.

THE COUNTESS OF ELGIN'S BALL.

The ball in the Town-hall last night, given by the European inhabitants of Calcutta in honour of the Countess of Elgin, could not but be most gratifying to his Excellency the Viceroy, as an evidence of the high appreciation in which his liberal hospitality and genial promotion of social enjoyment are held in Calcutta. No pains had been spared to make the occasion worthy of the honour done to the promoters of it, in his lordship's acceptance of their invitation. The Town-hall had been for days in the hands of the decorators, who were successful in giving effect to the grand proportions of the ornamentation, which was throughout made indicative of the spirit of the welcome accorded. The great pillars were converted into spirals of red, white, and blue, and between each pair were disposed the flags, apparently of all nations, and a few invented for the occasion. These were surmounted with coloured Chinese lanterns, whilst above all the sunlights threw down their floods of light through a roseate medium which took off the pale glare complained of by the ladies on their first introduction. At the end of the room, opposite the throne, were Lord Elgin's arms displayed, whilst all round the walls were emblazoned his cipher, and the names of Japan, Canada, Jamaica, and China, where Lord Elgin had ruled or treated; and beneath emblems of war and trophies of arms were blue and gold banners bearing the uncouth names of battles fought and cities taken in his Excellency's China expedition. About five hundred of the givers of the ball awaited the arrival of the Viceroy and the Countess of Elgin, who entered the room shortly before ten o'clock. Gay as Calcutta has been this season, thanks mainly to the Viceroy, nothing more harmonious or more enjoyable has been seen than this acknowledgment of the general debt due to him. In the hall below an excellent supper was provided by Mr. Brown, to which the guests, in the good old style, sat down. Lord and Lady Elgin, with about a dozen of the Governmental circle, occupying the centre table, to which they descended from the ball-room about twelve o'clock. The excellent arrangements of the supper left nothing to be wished for, either in appearance or substance; nothing, in fact, except that rarity at public suppers, good wine. At the close of the repast Sir Robert Napier rose and proposed the standard toast, "The health of the Queen;" and immediately after again rose, and, in well chosen terms, congratulated himself and his hearers upon the gratifying duty which now fell to his lot, being sure that his own sentiments were those of his hearers upon this happy occasion. They would pardon him that, even amid the prevailing gaiety of the hour, he must make allusion to a sad time—a time in which among many friends lost to them, was one whose privilege it had been theirs to call so, distinguished by virtue, grace, and station, whose loss had been felt as a personal one by all. In that sad hour the Viceroy had arrived, and the gloom was even deepened by more sad news from England. But higher praise could not be given than that no gloom could long resist the genial light reflected from the influence of the noble host in those halls, wherein the guests were not only welcome, but where their best acknowledgment of that hospitality was that they should join easily in the enjoyment of the hour, upon a social equality. They must have been well satisfied had they not known that there was one grace left, which the arrival of Lady Elgin had so well supplied. They had desired to see by his side that one source of relief from the burden of state, from every sting of care, and he was sure that he spoke for all present, and for many more, when he tendered their congratulations to the Viceroy and their hearty welcome to Lady Elgin. The gallant general, in terse terms, alluded to the mutual advantages of a thorough knowledge of each other by rulers and the ruled, and how many apparent causes of anger and mis-understanding were thus avoided. He alluded to the necessity of the approaching departure of Lord Elgin, not only on the ground of health, but of the necessity of seeing and knowing for himself the people over whom he was called to rule. India knew not yet her debt to England, and would only learn it in history. Their guests this evening had upon them no common claim. The earliest admirations and aspirations of boyhood gathered round the name of Bruce, and the lady they met to welcome was a daughter of the house of Grey, the "house that loves the people well." Sir Robert closed his telling speech amid loud cheers of "health and welcome" to the Viceroy and Lady Elgin.

His Excellency the Viceroy at once rose, and, with his usual fluency, left us the deep regret that the arrival of the small hours and the necessities of our daily publication must put any attempt at full report of his speech out of the question. He begged on behalf of Lady Elgin, and himself, to return their grateful thanks for the cordial welcome now offered them in such flattering terms, as well as for the sumptuous entertainment with which they had been received. In all his experience he had never seen more taste displayed, nor a ball more brilliantly filled; and though he last saw his fair friends representing in a most effective manner the costumes and changing styles of various ages, he could not refrain from expressing his satisfaction in meeting them again wearing their own faces and looking their best, as themselves. Allusion had been made to his efforts to promote their social pleasure—he took no credit to himself, for that course afforded him the most real pleasure, and his sincere hope was that there would be plenteous opportunities of becoming yet better acquainted. He alluded to the reasons of State which made his tour necessary. They would believe him that he should not forget Calcutta, which he held in highest respect, and would here, or elsewhere, at all times be glad when he could with propriety meet their wishes. On his return he hoped, with the assistance of Lady Elgin, to improve upon the imperfect endeavours he had hitherto made to promote their enjoyment. They were not proceeding up-country to escape from Calcutta, but from the indispensable necessity that a governor should take early opportunity of making himself acquainted with things and people beyond the limits of the seat of government. No charge so fatal to a ruler as that he knew nothing beyond what was immediately around him. He could only say that it would be the highest compliment he could pay to Simla if he should not there regret the pleasant days in Calcutta. In bidding them, as he now did, a cordial farewell, he asked them to join him in a bumper to their next happy meeting; and he sat down amidst most enthusiastic cheering. Their Excellencies shortly after retired, and at the time of our going to press the dancing was being kept up with unflagging spirit, and would, from all appearances, be likely to continue beyond the shortest hours of morning.—Englishman, Jan. 28.

THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

In a few days his Excellency the Governor-general and Viceroy will leave the Presidency for Benares, on his tour to the North West. The recent opening of the East Indian Railway from Monghyr and Jumalpoore to Dinapore and Benares, will enable his Excellency to perform this portion of his journey by a special train in a few hours. As public interest will be more than usually awakened by this opening of the line to Benares by the Viceroy, we have taken an opportunity of visiting the line and noting the progress of the works along it, as well as its general features and working. The public opening to Rajmahal by the late Lord Canning, and his speech on the occasion, must be still fresh in the memory of our readers, and to this point the road needs no description. Beyond this, the line skirts the foot of the Rajmahal Hills. Leaving Howrah by the nine p.m. or mail-train, thanks to the coals supplied by the contractors, and which the engine-drivers inform us are so bad that they will not give them the requisite steam power to keep the train to time, the traveller passes the Teen Pahar junction (Rajmahal) about day-light, or two hours behind time. Of course he grumbles at the railway people, and calls the guard a dozen times in the journey to ask why the train is delayed. He next admires the pretty and varied scenery, past which he is driving at about twenty-five miles an hour. Colgong, Bhaugulpore, Sultangunge, and their intermediate and pretty stations, are passed successively, until the line of hills approaching the rail more closely at last cross it at nearly right angles, and the train bursts through the Monghyr tunnel. The tunnel is about a quarter of a mile in length, its outer extremes at each end arched in with brickwork,—the solid bare rock forming the roof in the centre. On the other side of the tunnel the rail curves round to Jumalpoore. This will be a most important station of the company. Already large workshops for the locomotive department have been constructed, and barracks for about 800 workmen. Pretty red brick houses, with arched roofs, for the chief officials, stud the plain between the rail and the contiguous range of hills which here form almost an amphitheatre round the station. The elevation of the range is not great, but the jungle and verdure-clad surface make it most attractive. The cold, crisp atmosphere at this season warns the traveller when he alights that the half-hour which the train stops here whilst the engine and carriages are changed may be profitably employed. An inquiry of the station people leads him to a comfortable room with a well-spread breakfast table, at which, for the moderate charge of Rs. 1-8, a good appetite is soon appeased. Mr. Kellner, of Burdwan hotel celebrity, is the good genius of the refreshment rooms. A large hotel is to be built here, and must prove a most attractive resort for invalids and pleasure seekers. The air is pure and fresh; the scenery is pretty, and Monghyr, with its hot springs and park, is close at hand; the surrounding hills abound with game of every description,—and within a twelve hours' ride of Calcutta we know of no spot so inviting as Jumalpoore will prove when every convenience for travellers is complete. From Jumalpoore upwards, the rail continues to skirt the hills for about fifteen miles; and then succeeds mile on mile of an unbroken scene of green fields well cultivated. The poppy luxuriates, linseed, rape-seed, and castor-oil plants alternate the view. The first engineering work of any magnitude after leaving Jumalpoore is the Knol-bridge. It is on the girder lattice principle, and about a third of a mile in length; it is light in appearance. Viaducts, stations and bridges succeed one another, until Dinapore is reached at about 3 p.m. Here again the apparently inevitable, but ever to the traveller welcome Kellner is found with a carefully cooked and good dinner. After changing engines, the whistle and the guard's "All right" soon take us again into the green fields, and to Arrah. On leaving this, every eye is anxious to catch a first glimpse of the bridge over the Soane River. Well does this great work repay the traveller for the fatigue of a journey to the locality. In approaching it by a succession of increasing gradients, the line attains a high level of about 60 feet, and from bank to bank, with its 27 piers, spreads out this noble structure to the length of nearly a mile. The lattice girder principle is also employed here. The bridge is tubular. Carts and foot-passengers use the tunnel, or passage, and the trains pass over the upper surface, lined on each side by a light railing. Every one has read of, or is familiar with, the almost insurmountable engineering difficulties which have been so successfully overcome in carrying out this last work. When passing over it, and looking down on the swift and treacherous stream it spans, an Englishman may well feel pride and listen with pleasure to the almost childish expressions of wonder of the natives at the skill and triumphant energy which have completed this splendid bridge. On the return journey from Benares the traveller has the most advantageous view of it, as the rail for a distance of nearly two miles curves round to cross it, and when first seen from this direction the view is nearly a side one. The train does not stop to enable a closer inspection, but passes quickly on through a fresh and richly cultivated level. Glimpses of the Ganges are occasionally caught throughout the journey, and here and there a steamer paddling along reminds us of the tedious mode of river progression. Half-past five p.m. on the day after leaving Calcutta, or about twenty-five hours, brings us to Benares. Arriving at night, the view by sunrise of the town from the opposite bank of the river is missed. A well-constructed bridge of boats carries you over the native town, and a drive of about four miles to the European quarters. There are three hotels, each of them comfortable, and well kept. The charges are moderate, and the food plain and good. The city is peculiarly native in its narrow alleys and by no means pleasant smells, and in this last peculiarity reminds us strongly of Calcutta. Stone is largely used in house building and street pavement. It gives a more solid and cleanly appearance than is generally noticeable about Calcutta. The only buildings of interest are the Observatory, the Temples, and the Minarets. Our space does not admit of a detailed notice of any of them. The last named are about two hundred feet high, and the view from the top of the towers is extensive and pleasing. You see the cantonments of the European quarters, and the scattered residences of the civil and military staff. The church is a plain edifice, centrally situated. There is a well kept botanical garden, and an exceedingly fine bath-house, where good-folms swim; and, with chota hazree of a morning, must be an agreeable and healthy place of resort. Beyond its wealth and commercial importance, little more remains to be said of Benares under the description of a flying visit to it. We may add that the dust, both in thickness and quality, equalled anything we owe to the Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta. Civility and attention are everywhere met with amongst the officials. The carriages are scarcely adapted to long journeys, but we believe new and more comfortable ones are in course of construction. The station buildings are large and commodious; but in some of them scarcely well enough supplied with conveniences for passengers. Beyond Teen Pahar it is evident that the line has been opened before, beyond the mere laying the rails, it is fit for public traffic. The stations are in many instances not even finished, and in no case did we find a roof on. All in a state of mere organization; but we must admit that whatever that organization may be, or by whom controlled, a wonderful facility for conquering difficulties, or at least adapting them to circumstances, is evidenced throughout. The line has been opened for the public, and this gives them the right of complaint. We do not, however, hesitate to say that it is prematurely opened; but we have seen the Soane bridge, and that alone would reconcile us to much of inconvenience. The distance through which the rail runs beyond Jumalapore is one of the richest in agricultural productions in India; and we noticed at almost every station that capacious goods warehouses were in a forward state for goods traffic accommodation. In the present state of the line (a single one) no care or foresight could enable the traffic of both passengers and goods to be carried on to the extent which must arise either satisfactorily or safely. We shall be only too glad to find that the caution and care, now evident along the line, result in that prevention of accidents which, with the material worked with of native station-masters and pointsmen, are by no means improbable, until a double line and longer training of the working officers render them at all events much less possible.—Englishman, Jan. 30.

CALCUTTA.

Compared with all other towns of English origin in the East, Calcutta is a city. They are mere camping grounds, with detached bungalows spreading over a plain or dotted along the ridges of hills, with here and there a street devoted to mercantile offices. But Calcutta makes a near approach to a European capital in the size of its private houses, the number and contiguity of its public buildings, and the regularity of its streets and squares, which the eye may take in almost at a glance. Yet Calcutta, the capital of an empire as large as all Europe except Russia, the political focus of two hundred millions of people, is not equal to a third-rate English town. Partly owing to the ever-fluctuating character of its English society, which changes root and branch every seven years, but due still more to its anomalous position as the seat of two separate authorities, like the Supreme and Bengal Governments, Calcutta has always been neglected. In a higher sense than London is said to be England, in the same sense as Paris is declared to be France, Calcutta embodies the political and commercial activities of English India. It reflects English supremacy just as Lahore, and Agra, and Delhi have successively marked Mogul dominion, and has Benares represents Hindoo wealth and superstition. Every great nation is proud of its capital, and lavishes imperial wealth upon it. But, though Calcutta is the first English city in the East, compared with what the capital of such an empire ought to be, it is contemptible, nay, disgraceful. In all that makes a great capital—public buildings, facilities of transit and trade, social conveniences, cleanliness and sanitary arrangements—the city has never been what it ought to be, and for years it has been steadily degenerating. At last a new era seems about to dawn upon it. It has been decided by Parliament, in spite of Mr. Grant Duff, that it shall continue to be the capital, and Mr. Beadon's administration promises to see the beginning of changes which will make it more worthy of its imperial position and commercial importance.

The first mark of a great capital is its public buildings. As if Government House were not ugly enough already, a flagstaff has been erected on its ungraceful dome, so short in length that the resemblance of the Viceroy's residence to a child's toy, or a sugar ornament on a Christmas cake, has now been completed. The true reform would be to turn the building into public offices, and erect a viceregal palace on a site near the present racecourse. But it is not likely that this will be done, and so the committee, which for more than a year has been drawing up plans for a new pile of public buildings, have recommended a different course. They propose to erect a building, very like a railway terminus, on the site occupied by the present "Writers' Buildings," where of old young civilians lived in glorious freedom. The edifice will occupy the whole of the street in front of that which it supersedes, and extend nearer the edge of the Tank than the present road does. All traffic will then pass behind the new pile, and to make up to the public for the loss of their road, the street behind it will be of double its present width. The road at the other end of the square will also be widened, the statue of Lord Hastings being removed elsewhere. We trust the offices accommodated in the new pile will be purely imperial in their character, and that Lord Elgin will insist on a more magnificent design than that proposed. Moreover, the stables and barracks which shut out Government House from the square should be removed either to Hastings-street or Cossitollah, when Government House would front the new buildings, which will be flanked by the Dalhousie Institute on one side and the new Post-office on the other, while the new Agra Bank takes the place of Messrs. R. C. Lepage and Co.'s establishment. Calcutta would then have at least one square which might vie with the places of Paris and surpass those of London. The vicinity would be farther adorned by the new High Court, which it is proposed to build near the site of the late Supreme Court building. The improvement could be effected at little cost if part of the space thus gained were devoted to shops, which would fetch a high rent. Louis Napoleon would accomplish the whole in three years, and make it pay.

Next to public buildings we look for facilities for traffic in a capital. We are promised decent hack carriages at moderate fares. A street railway for light locomotives is about to be laid from Dhappa on the Eastern Canal. Passing under the Eastern Bengal line it will join the terminus of both that and of the Mutlah Railway at Sealdah, and there crossing the Circular-road will pass along by the Gas Company's premises down Muchooa Bazaar to the Hooghly at a point near the Mint. Thence it will run parallel with the river right on to Colvin's Ghaut. The work will probably be carried out by Mr. Wilson's Branch Railway Company. There is no reason why a bridge should not cross the Hooghly at Armenian Ghaut, and wet docks be made in the new land thrown up by the Hooghly above Bishop's College. The whole system of railways on both sides of the river would thus be connected, and in time the Assam tea planter might travel from Cachar to Bombay without changing carriages. This is no dream; it is a question merely of time. Such schemes may seem to be imaginary from their cost, but the most sober engineer and merchant will confess that capital wisely expended on them will give large returns, such is the crying want of facilities for a yearly increasing trade. A River Trust, like that of Glasgow, will adapt the river and bank improvements to these changes. Ships should be able to load and unload at jetties on which rails are laid, wagons conveying at once the produce of India to the ship and taking away the imports from the West to the interior. Merchants, no longer living in town, would be able to step into railway carriages at their office doors, and be conveyed in half-an-hour to those villas which are springing up on both sides of the lines for a radius of fifteen miles out of the city.

The rapidity with which these and similar improvements will be carried out must depend to some extent on the municipality which it is proposed to give to Calcutta. But even should the citizens show their usual apathy in the matter, we are glad to believe that Mr. Beadon is prepared to act the dictator, and make his administration remembered on a small scale as Louis Napoleon's will be. The proposed municipality will be found described elsewhere. Combining the principle of self government with official aid and supervision, so that when the former fails the latter may step in, the general outline of the plan seems to us unexceptionable. The forty or fifty justices of the peace, as a corporate town-council, under a salaried chairman, and a vice-chairman who will also be town clerk on not more than 1,200 rs. a-month, will virtually govern the city. The subordinate executive will consist of an engineer, surveyor, health officer and assessor, appointed and removed, with the vice-chairman, by the justices. The Lieutenant-Governor will appoint the chairman, but he must be removed on a requisition of two-thirds of the justices. The Bill thus gives a fair amount of self government as a beginning. More important than this is its provision for taking a periodical census of the population, and for the registration of births, deaths, and marriages—reforms for which we have so long called. At present the municipal income of Calcutta, with its share of the income-tax, is nearly £110,000 a-year. Another £10,000 will provide for all purely municipal works, but very nearly the whole of this sum will be required in addition, to meet interest on the loans for drainage and waterworks. A proper system of assessment is all that is needed to do at least much to make the wealth of Calcutta answer this demand; and if a fair attempt to meet it is made, it would certainly be the duty of the Imperial Government to assist in beautifying the capital, as is done by all civilised States.

But health is more important than beauty, and we congratulate the Bengal Government on its promise of a census of vital statistics and a health officer. We trust the citizens of Calcutta will meet Mr. Beadon in the same spirit, and for a time spare neither purse nor energy, till Calcutta is made at least as healthy and as cool as Serempore, while it becomes an ornament to the empire and an exponent of our national power and character.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION have disavowed Mr. P. Modelliar as their agent in England, condemning some of his remarks on the British administration of India as "not only wholly untrue, but such as no intelligent or loyal native would endorse." They are about to forward an address to Sir C. Wood expressing the satisfaction with which they contemplate his policy, with special advertence to the Breach of Contract Bill and the Sale of Waste Lands, and the extension of the Permanent Settlement to all India.

SINDE.—In Our Paper of the 30th ult. we find the subjoined account of a mutiny of the "Gold Coast Corps," which our contemporary had received from a gentleman at Kurrachee, whose brother has the misfortune to be senior medical officer at Sierra Leone. The affair might have ended as tragically as did the military revolts in India during 1857, had the treacherous contrivers of it not prematurely betrayed their murderous purpose, and it unhappily remains yet to be seen whether it has not partially done so, notwithstanding the providential check sustained by them at Cape Coast Castle, to which station, our elder readers will remember, a melancholy interest attaches, on account of its having been the scene of the closing years of poor "L. E. L.'s" troubled though brilliant life, and most painful and mysterious end:—"On the 19th October the mail from Lagos and the Gold Coast arrived at Sierra Leone, and brought news that the Gold Coast Corps had mutinied; and had not one of the native chiefs come on with his men, and taken possession of the fort, the officers would have been murdered. The commanding officer of the corps, Major Brownell, and a commissariat officer, were in the mail on their way home on medical certificate, but have been detained at Sierra Leone to give evidence on the court-martial. A man-of-war was expected next day with eighty of the mutineers, and detachments from Waterloo have been called in to strengthen the garrison of Sierra Leone before the prisoners land. It appears that it was a preconcerted affair, and all the corps, which is distributed in small detachments along the Gold Coast, were to mutiny on a certain day. But fortunately they broke out at Cape Coast Castle two days too soon, just before the mail left, otherwise a month would have elapsed before it would have been known at Sierra Leone. All the officers at Cape Coast Castle have escaped, but nothing is known of the other stations. On the 20th October, when the mail left, the engineer department were busy constructing a prison to receive the mutineers, out of a spare barrack."—Madras Athenæum, Jan. 28.

BELGAUM, Jan. 10.—The medals for the late China war (which had been lying here for some time) were distributed last evening to the men of her Majesty's 44th Regiment, who had shared in the campaign. Early in the afternoon, while the sun was hot and oppressive, notwithstanding the protection of the helmet hats, all the troops in the station—consisting of two batteries of Royal Artillery, her Majesty's 44th Regiment, 2nd Grenadiers N.I., and the 24th Regiment N.I.—were marshalled before the band-stand. The sun very speedily affected several of the soldiers. One of the artillerymen was sent in a dooly to the hospital suffering from a sun stroke, and one or two of the 44th also succumbed. The spectators evinced a common expression of regret that so interesting a ceremony should be thus marred. The distribution began at half-past four o'clock p.m., and lasted for upwards of an hour. The band-stand was decorated with evergreens, and the medals were laid upon a table, beside which stood the Brigadier, surrounded by his staff, who delivered a medal to each soldier as he passed before him. There were so many medals to deliver that I imagine the arm of the veteran must have been tired in the operation, however pleasing it may have been. Before, however, the Brigadier affixed the medals, he rode up to the men and spoke to them of the valour which had procured such an honourable mark of their country's regard, and made many eulogistic remarks. Colonel Browne then stepped forward, and thanked the Brigadier in the name of the gallant corps. Colonel Browne has a most soldier-like presence, and his empty dexter sleeve, pinned to his breast, proclaims that he has every claim to the distinguished position he holds among brave men. At the conclusion of this interesting ceremony the troops formed in column and marched passed the Brigadier, to the enlivening strains of martial music. The sun had now set behind the western range of hills, and the crowd departed, some to prepare for the ball, which is to be a full-dress one.

RUINED CAVALRY OFFICERS.—Our correspondent, "Sabretash," and his brother officers of the late Company's cavalry service, who have been thrown out of employ and lost their promising career by the abolition of that arm, would do us serious injustice were they to assume that we ever treated their cause with carelessness or neglected to urge upon the Government every fact and grievance which is noticed in the temperate letter in our correspondence columns. Not only have the Company's cavalry officers generally, with their brethren at large of the late armies, always received our best assistance and support against the injustice under which they have suffered, but, as far back as August or September, 1861, when the formation of the three new hussar regiments was pretty correctly known, we brought strongly to the notice of the Government and the Commander-in-Chief the fearful wrong that would be inflicted upon the Company's cavalry officers who could not be placed in those corps, and who consequently were, as soldiers, utterly ruined and thrown out of any suitable military career. So hearty and thorough-going was our advocacy of what we then felt, and still feel, to be a case of extreme hardship and undeserved ruin as regards these officers, and of apparent heartlessness and actual breach of faith on the part of the Government, that it is almost impossible for us to write anything in support of the former, or in appeal to the justice of the latter, that shall not be a repetition of our former remarks. So far from our correspondent having overdrawn the sketch of his own and his brother officer's case, the fact is that he has wisely and calmly under-coloured the picture, and so entitled his own and their cause to the temperate but strong advocacy of this and of every other Indian journal. Whilst the mass of the late Company's infantry officers, and artillery and engineers have suffered or benefited in different degrees by the ruin of their former Government and the subsequent amalgamation, the superfluous cavalry officers have been utterly and irrevocably ruined as regards their professional career and hopes, have suffered a very serious pecuniary loss as regards income, and have seen their regimental funds and other institutions, to the maintenance of which they had largely contributed, in the hope of ultimate return and benefit, utterly annihilated and swept away, without any hope of redress or compensation. All this is now irrevocable, and what has been swept away can no more be re-constituted or revived; but it is the duty of the Government, in common honesty and honour, and on every consideration of probity and good faith, to grant these unfortunate officers some compensation, and to dissolve, on creditable and liberal terms, a connection which can never again be advantageous or useful to either party. It is not asserted, it is not even hoped or pretended by the Government, that these cavalry officers can ever again renew the career upon which they entered when they came into the service of the former Government; and surely it is the duty of that Government's successor, which annihilated their service, and cut short their career in its prime, to maintain the public faith towards them, and set them free to seek some other walk in the field of life. All that is wanted is a just and conscientious consideration on the part of the Government towards these officers; and we believe that, all things considered, they could in all cases be easily satisfied.—Englishman, Jan. 21.

THE "INDIAN MIRROR" states that Baboo Gour Dass Bysack, the deputy-magistrate of Moorshe-dabad, has been suspended for having made a fraudulent attempt to pass off as his own production an Oordu translation prepared by another person. The Baboo was for some time librarian of the Bengal Asiatic Society.

LUCKNOW, Jan. 13.—The weather is beautiful here just now: the thermometer outside at sunrise 38 deg., and in the house at two p.m. 64 deg. The Commander-in-Chief's camp arrived here on the 9th inst., and his Excellency is expected about the 17th or 18th. All the military are preparing for his advent, and parades are incessant in every branch of the army. The Chutter Munzil amateurs have theatricals on the 22nd, and new pieces are being got up to be produced before his Excellency and staff. A most extraordinary case has been lately tried in the civil court. It appears that several natives, who were implicated in the murder of a European girl of 14 or 15, and a little child of 3 years old, have been hiding themselves for a long time. One of the culprits was caught a few days ago, but released on bail. Mr. Lightle, a clerk, escaped miraculously with his life during the rebellion; but his relatives, the victims above mentioned, were barbarously murdered by the Soodhas. He endeavoured for a long while to discover these miscreants, and at last found three of them. He furnished himself with a warrant from the magistrate, and, taking three or four servants along with him, proceeded in the afternoon to search for the house of one of them. On his way thither he met a policeman, from whom he inquired if he knew where that individual house was; he replied in the affirmative, and then ran away. Mr. Lightle sent a couple of his servants to the thannah for assistance; but they had not been gone long when he was surrounded by a crowd of men, who immediately commenced abusing him, and forcibly dragged him to the man's house, where the villain met him with a drawn sword, and upon learning that he possessed a warrant for his apprehension, ordered his domestics to beat him with sticks. He was then pinioned, as well as his servants, and made over to the constables on a charge of criminal trespass. On being taken before the deputy superintendent of police, who is a Parsee, he showed the magistrate's warrant, and told him of the brutal beating he had received, when the villain who instigated the assault was taken into custody. I have not heard whether Mr. Lightle is likely to secure the conviction of the native or not.

THE BENGAL COMMISSARIAT.—The labours of the Calcutta Commissariat Commission, which circumstances have to a certain extent rendered famous, are at an end; and the members will return almost immediately to their respective appointments. Nothing now remains to be done further than the drawing up of the report of the commission, and whether that document will ever be published for general information, or will, like the report of the Cholera Commission, be consigned to apparent oblivion, we are unable to say. We may, however, mention that the result of the thorough and searching enquiry of the Commissariat Commission will be, should their report ever get publicity, to raise the Bengal Commissariat still higher in public estimation even than it has hitherto stood, and, in a few words, to make it take rank as the first Commissariat in the world. It is the fact that, after a most minute and laborious investigation by a commission of five officers from five different branches of the public service, and extending over nearly a year, the unanimous conclusion arrived at is, that, with a few exceptions of very trifling import and of easy remedy, the Bengal Commissariat is something very near perfection, much nearer it, indeed, than any other department or branch of the public service or administration in India. Of course, every department has its weak points and defects, and in the case of the Commissariat these emblems of human construction and organisation were freely admitted, when proved, by the Commissariat member of the commission himself. But the aggregate of the faults or failings registered against the Commissariat is dwarfed into utter insignificance when compared with the excellent working, the honourable management, and the vast utility, power, and resources of that branch of the public service. With such complete triumph and credit has the Commissariat Department gone through, and come out of the inquiry which has just been brought to a conclusion, that, unless some wonderful and unforeseen change for the worse should come over that branch, it may be considered as a permanent institution of our military system, in which no changes of any moment will be required, beyond those which all human organisations demand, to keep them in equal progress with the improvements and reforms which come up so rapidly in these changing times. It appears to be proved that the suspicions and grave accusations of which the Bengal Commissariat was made the object were unjust and unfounded; and, consequently, it also appears that the expensive assembling and sitting of the commission, which has just closed its labours, were utterly uncalled for and useless, beyond the fact of placing the commissariat in a more advantageous and creditable position than ever, for which result, however, the public have paid dear. We believe that we are under the mark in estimating the cost to the public of this Commissariat Commission at something above Rs. 60,000, which sum, as far as any equivalent result or benefit is concerned, has been simply thrown away. Of the five officers who composed the commission, four were drawing the full pay of their primary appointments or commands, the Commissariat officer also drawing full allowances. For the four officers first referred to, four others were officiating in their appointments or commands, also receiving full pay and allowances; and in that way the sum above named, at the least, has been thrown away at a dead loss to the public. As far, then, as any necessity for this Commissariat inquiry, or any damage resulting from it to the department is concerned, the whole thing may be classed under the head of "frivolous and vexatious," and we congratulate the officers of the Commissariat on the gratifying manner in which they and their department have passed through the ordeal.—Englishman, Jan. 27.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR S. CORBET.—Every person acquainted with the events of 1857 will unite with us in the pleasure with which we announce that Major-General Sir Stuart Corbet, K.C.B., is the general officer selected to be brought upon the divisional staff in Bengal, and to succeed Major-General Campbell in his command at Benares, the term of which will shortly expire. Sir Stuart Corbet is the officer to whose wisdom, foresight, and energy the safety of the Punjab at the outbreak, and during the continuance of the rebellion, is mainly attributable; for it was he who, whilst others were drivelling about taking the percussion caps from the native troops at Lahore, when the news of the Meerut and Delhi atrocities reached that capital, boldly took the extreme measure of totally disarming the sepoys, and paralysed them by the decision and coolness with which he carried out his sagacious determination. Sir Stuart Corbet returned to India from England last year, and has since been residing in the hills awaiting his time for a divisional command in this presidency, which he has well earned by his eminent services, and which we hope he may long enjoy with the same esteem and popularity which he gained in his brigade command at Lahore.

THE ANTIQUITIES, &c., OF THE PUNJAB.—A meeting was held at the Reading Rooms on the 27th Dec., "with a view of devising some plan for collecting information regarding the antiquities, ethnology, climatology, arts, manufactures, &c., of the Punjab, and adjoining countries." After a few preliminaries it was resolved:—1. That communications be opened out with all commissioners and deputy commissioners, and assistants in independent charge, inviting them to co-operate; and also with the following gentlemen:—Dr. Bellew, Rev. Isidore Lowenthal, Rev. H. A. Joesche, and Mr. Drew. 2nd. That the following gentlemen be asked to be members of the committee:—H. Stevens, Esq., Dr. Brown, Dr. Neil, and Pundit Munphool. 3rd. That Mr. Davies be requested to prepare a memorandum of the existing information, regarding the tribes, &c., inhabiting the Punjab and adjoining countries. 4th. That Lieut.-colonel Mac-lagan be requested to prepare a similar memorandum, regarding arts, and manufactures. 5th. That Dr. Cleghorn be requested to afford his aid in the same manner, regarding the Fanna and Flora of the Punjab. 6th. That Mr. T. H. Thornton be requested to prepare from local reports, and other memoranda, a list of objects of historical and antiquarian interest, concerning which further information is desired. 7th. That a copy of these proceedings be forwarded to the secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, with an intimation that it is the desire of this provincial committee to co-operate with the Asiatic Society in the manner above indicated, or in any other way by which the objects of the society may be promoted, and that they will feel obliged by the society's guidance in the matter.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.—Now that efforts are being made by the colonists of the Straits Settlements to gain their separation from Indian rule, it may be well to give the revenue returns of its chief port, Singapore; these will serve to convince those (if there be any) who desire the retention of these outlying districts how unimportant the subject is after all:—

Land	Rs.	56,501
Excise	"	838,362
Judicial	"	54,957
Miscellaneous	"	94,281
Total Local	"	1,044,101
Add on account of Indian Government, Post Office, and jail manufactures, &c.	"	115,326
	Rs.	1,159,427

The expenditure during 1861-62 amounted to Rs. 1,059,530, consisting of—

Local residency charges	Rs.	645,286
Postal,	"	12,058
Convicts	"	131,249
Military	"	260,662
Imperial Government	"	10,275
Total	Rs.	1,059,530

While we are referring to these settlements, we would call the attention of our rulers and our merchants to the immense advantages derived from those ports that are known as "free ports." Here is Singapore, with imports valued at only 55,725,104 rupees, visited in one year by 1,052 sea-going vessels and 2,167 coasters. We wonder how the figures would have stood if such port charges existed there as we have in Calcutta. We would also call attention to the rapidly advancing increase in the exports from all places in the Straits; the figures which show those of Singapore are something wonderful, and whether the colonists remain under Indian rule or not we can never fail to watch with interest the increasing prosperity of these localities, destined as they are in the course of time to be of immense value to Great Britain. As yet they have happily enjoyed an immunity from vexatious tariffs, and a consideration of the results will do good to us all, and might even be worthy of the careful attention of our new Finance Minister. We sincerely trust the time is not far distant when India will be able to show equally well how capable her commerce is of expansion when freed from its present ridiculous trammels. There is no reason whatever why our ports should be subjected to such dues as are now levied on ships and goods. Our export duties are a disgrace to us: in the same proportion as they are levied they retard our progress and impede our trade. If such a form of taxation has invariably been found detrimental to British interests in every other quarter of the globe, why should it have a peculiar value in India. When we see the exports of Singapore increasing in one year from Rs. 41,878,748 to Rs. 49,615,520, and find that each year shows a steady increase, we are forced to ask what might we look for in Calcutta if our tariff were but framed somewhat in accordance with the spirit of the age in which we live.—Englishman, Feb. 4.

COLONEL V. EYRE.—We hear that Colonel V. Eyre, C.B., of the Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, and at present officiating as principal inspector-general of ordnance, retires from the service almost immediately. It would appear that the new artillery retiring fund is in working order, as, if we are rightly informed, Colonel Eyre receives a handsome bonus from the artillery regiment to retire. We believe that we shall soon have other retirements from the top of the artillery list to chronicle.

THE INCOME-TAX is, happily for India, doomed. Our new Chancellor of the Exchequer has already directed his close attention to its operation. He has collected a mass of facts illustrative of the grievous oppression to which it has given rise, especially in the North-Western Provinces. These he proposes to submit to a conference of some of his colleagues in the Imperial Council which he has convened. Sir Charles Trevelyan's budget will exhibit a larger surplus than even his predecessor and rival could boast.—Indian Field.

FIRE ON BOARD A STEAMER.—We learn from the Daily Press (Hong Kong) of the 14th Jan. that, "as the P. and O. steamer Cadiz was leaving the harbour for Shanghai, with the mails and a cargo valued at half-a-million sterling, she was discovered to be on fire in the fore hold. She ran on shore, was scuttled, and the fire extinguished. The sound portion of the cargo was transhipped to the steamer Benares, which sailed the day following. The damage to the cargo is trifling, but the vessel is seriously injured."

COMMISSARIAT COMMISSION.—We are informed, and on the very best authority, that in our recent remarks upon the Commissariat Commission, we much under-estimated the cost of its assembling and labours to the public, which, it appears, was not, as we stated, Rs. 60,000, but was something over Rs. 1,00,000. So much the worse. A lakh of rupees is a serious sum to throw away nowadays in the pursuit of phantoms and shadows. We shall be obliged to anyone who will furnish us with an estimate of the cost of the Cholera Commission.—Englishman.

MR. J. I. HARVEY.—We understand that Mr. J. I. Harvey, of the Civil Service, late Sub-Treasurer of Fort William, and at present officiating Auditor and Accountant General of India, has applied to the Civil Paymaster and the Accountant-General for the usual certificate of "No demand" preparatory to his retiring from the service on the 1st of May next.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF's camp leaves Lucknow on the 10th February. His Excellency goes to Cawnpore on that day to meet the Governor-general, then returns to Lucknow and overtakes the camp at Seetapore via Gondah. The stories that have been circulated about his Excellency's unpopularity are decidedly not verified by his reception at Lucknow, and the "cheer with nine times nine and one cheer more" does not testify to the "universal disgust" with which some Indian papers try to make people believe he is regarded.

THE 22ND REGIMENT PUNJAB N. I., Major Stafford's, recently returned from the north of China, and ordered in the relief to Cawnpore, has had its destination changed by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and is ordered to continue its march to Umballah, at which station it will remain during this year. This is a considerate arrangement, as it places the men of the returned regiment nearer their homes, without at the same time breaking through the rule of dispersion of races, by which the distribution of our Native Army ought always to be regulated. A glance of the eye military at the map of this Presidency and at the stations occupied by Native troops, will show that this rule has been constantly, though quietly, kept in view; and we hope that it will never again be lost sight of.

ERECTION OF A GENERAL HOSPITAL AT DELHI.—We hear that the Punjab Government has sanctioned the entertainment of a proposal by the local authorities for the erection of a large general hospital at Delhi. This will be the first thing of the kind in Upper India proper, and with our knowledge of the thorough modernising this city is undergoing in the introduction of everything which is liberal and enlightened, it is with no surprise to us that the lead has once more been assumed in the present instance. It is to be on a very useful and liberal scale, capable of accommodating eighty sick natives, and of affording them the advantages of European medical skill in the manner best adapted for its successful operation. At the same time, by attention to the usages of the country, and to native conventionalities, it will become available for the afflicted of the higher classes of the community. The design of the building itself displays, we hear, great architectural taste, while in detail nothing has been forgotten to make it well adapted to the requirements of such an institution. There will be long corridors for the sick of the lower classes, while apartments completely shut off from each other, will invite the higher castes, whose sensitive feelings as regards privacy and seclusion will thus be respected. This institution will also become of inestimable value to the whole of Northern India, as well as to the city of Delhi itself, by the instruction and experience it will be capable of giving to natives who may be anxious to make themselves acquainted with our medical system, and who may be either unwilling or unable to go long distances down country to pursue their studies. Our dispensaries, most valuable though they be, are quite inadequate to afford accommodation to any but the lower classes, and being almost universally without private wards, none of the higher castes can avail themselves of the advantages they afford. Besides, when it is remembered that Delhi is a city containing a hundred thousand souls, one dispensary can only afford medical aid to an exceedingly small proportion of the sick, of whom there must be at all times from five to ten thousand within the precincts of the city, not taking into consideration those in the surrounding districts; we must consider, too, that this hospital will be a boon not only to the sick, but to those in health. Prevention is better than cure. It is incalculable what epidemics have been, and still may be engendered in the loathsome back alleys and unclean corners with which so large a city cannot but abound, where at present they cannot be reached, and where thousands are no doubt now allowed to die, unvisited by European medical skill. As a sanitary measure, then, this hospital will prove of priceless value; as it will mainly serve to protect the public health from the influence of certain epidemics, of insidious origin, which are apt to thwart all ordinary preventive measures upon which so much public money is expended. It may be thought by some that a city so large as Delhi should be capable of affording relief for its own sick, but in such a matter as this we feel convinced that Government patronage is indispensable, and past experience has proved that maladies are neglected, and that disease become incurable when left to the judgment and management of natives themselves, without the guidance of trained observation and science. Time, and the working of a well organised system will prove convincing to the natives themselves that disease to be properly treated must be detected early, and anxiously watched, instead of being left to the uncertain influences of chance and hope. The current expenses, however, of the Delhi hospital will be easily supported, partly by public subscription, and partly by a monthly moiety from the noble Octroi fund, the surplus income of which is Rs. 4,000 a month. The original outlay will be defrayed from Imperial and local funds. The Delhi Dispensary will continue its operations unaltered. There the main object is the mere dispensing of medicines to out-door patients. The General Hospital, on the other hand, will afford in-door accommodation to those who are prostrate from disease, or who require the performance of serious surgical operations. In each one of the eighty apartments of the institution the inmate will be able to have around him his relatives or friends, male or female. In addition, there will be a verandah and a yard, in which cooking, and all other necessities of the patient, can be carried on in privacy. If necessary, a purdah will also be available to ensure as perfect seclusion as could possibly be enjoyed at the patient's own home. The above general outline is sufficient to indicate that the principle on which the treatment and comfort of the sick will be regulated is essentially in accordance with their own ideas of what medical philanthropy ought to be. We believe it is also intended to institute co-operative association between the native hakeem on the one hand, and the European physician on the other. The latter will learn that there is a system of Eastern medicine, trammelled with faults, perhaps, but still most valuable, towards which his thoughts have never before been sufficiently directed; whilst the hakeems will be brought to confess that exact science and refinements in practical pharmacy are preferable to incantations and charms, or even to the most expert empiricism. Thus European knowledge will be daily put in practice, whilst an ample field will have been obtained for the study and practical application of indigenous drugs, a subject of growing interest in its relations to the Medical Science of the Western world. Statistics obtained from the working of such a combined system will be of most essential value. The Government which gives to its people railways, telegraphs, flourishing commerce, education, modern science, and large public charities is, we may depend upon it, pursuing the surest method of securing happiness to its subjects and stability to its rule.—Delhi Gazette.

GROSS NEGLECT OF INVALID SOLDIERS.—Our attention has been drawn to the culpable neglect shown by those officials entrusted with the duty of superintending the removal of our invalid soldiers from the various Up-country depots to this Presidency, en route for England. Some gross instances of neglect and mismanagement have lately occurred; and in the case of two detachments of men who arrived here in flats from Allahabad only the other day a serious mortality occurred, owing to the entire absence, as we are credibly informed, of all those comforts and appliances so necessary everywhere, and in this country particularly, for invalids. We are not in a position to state where the blame or responsibility rests, but we are satisfied that the Government would not willingly countenance any instance of neglect. We are informed that instead of quartering these invalids at the Allahabad hospital temporarily, pending efficient arrangements for their removal, they were shipped on board of flats, without the slightest inquiry as to the accommodation available, and regardless of the most ordinary precautions for ensuring medical skill and comforts. The consequence has been that many poor fellows died on the passage, victims in many cases to the almost criminal neglect of those entrusted with the duty of seeing them properly cared for. We feel confident that the fact has merely to be brought to the knowledge of the Government to ensure a strict and searching inquiry.—Hurkaru.

EAST INDIA AND LONDON STEAM SHIPPING COMPANY.—The position of the East India and London Steam Shipping Company has from its first starting, about a year ago, been at best uncertain, we mean with respect to the prospect of its proving a remunerative investment for those interested. Alternate hope and fear must have actuated the minds of the directors from the first. If a rapid and in every way successful voyage was made one month, the succeeding one brought the news of a disaster that absorbed entirely any profits accruing. The other day we reported the total loss of the sc. st. Jason off Madras, we have now to notice the rapid homeward passage of the Hydaspes. Papers to hand by the last mail notice her arrival after a run of seventy-three days from Madras. Passengers all well, and highly pleased with the ship. We hope that a series of rapid and prosperous voyages will make up for the extraordinary run of ill luck that this company have met with latterly, for we consider the public are very largely interested in the question of cheap passages to England. We fear that the wreck of the Jason, and other heavy losses occurring in such rapid succession, will cause a temporary interruption in the arrival and departure of these ships.—Englishman.

CONVERTS' REMARRIAGE.—Let no false covering of sentiment or expediency be thrown over the subject. Marriage is not a necessity to either sex, in any climate, or at any age. Many from choice, poverty, or not obtaining the one desired object, never marry. Many never remarry; many have partners separated by the sharp necessities of life from them for years; many have partners incurably invalid or insane, or (in this country) leprosy. No one could urge divorce on such grounds. We denounce the sentimental view of the case, that it is an intolerable hardship for a man not to have a wife, or a woman not to have a husband. This is very low ground to take, that marriage is necessary to prevent unchastity in the case of a new believer who has been taught by the Holy Spirit, or takes credit for having been so taught, to know Christ and his pure religion. If the case be further complicated by the converts during the life of their unconverted partners having become involved in an intrigue with another; if converts, themselves unmarried, connect themselves by unhallowed ties with persons whose lawful partners are still living; if pairs of dissolute Christians under such circumstances approach their pastor, and request permission to ratify at God's altar an adulterous contract on which they have already entered; if parties living in concubinage are received into the Christian flock, we cease to wonder that there is no blessing on our missions. The result which we conscientiously arrive at is, that no Christian converts can legally, or morally, marry, so long as the partners, to whom they were married according to the lex personæ of their faith, are living in chastity; the rule is the same for either sex. We can support neither the Bill of Sir Charles Jackson nor of the late Mr. Ritchie, which would give liberty to the converts to snap all the contracts made by themselves in good faith, and legalise adultery. St. Paul in his advice to the Corinthians on the mode of dealing with an unbelieving partner, says, 'Let him depart,' but he does not go on to say, 'Let the believing partner marry again.' This is the real point of the argument.—Lahore Chronicle.

THE FRACAS ON THE LAHORE RACECOURSE.—LAHORE, Feb. 2.—"In reference to the fracas (reported in A.I.M. Feb. 20) which took place on the Lahore racecourse between a member of the press and some officers and soldiers, about which I wrote you in a previous letter, I have managed to procure a copy of the letter addressed to the Brigade-Major at Meean Meer, and of that officer's reply, which may perhaps be sufficiently interesting for transfer to the Delhi Gazette:—'To Brigade-Major, Meean Meer,—Sir, I have the honour to state for the information of the officer commanding the [station], that I was assaulted yesterday in the most dastardly manner by a mob of artillery and infantry soldiers, the ringleader being a person in plain clothes, who, from his appearance, manners, and language I should not have suspected to have been an officer and a gentleman, as I have since been assured is the case. I am desirous of prosecuting this person and his accomplices in the Magistrate's Court at Lahore, the offence having been committed within its jurisdiction. I would add that the officer struck me after I had mentioned my name, and notwithstanding I was at the time supporting myself on crutches. Some of the other cowards who had joined in the attack upon one man, and that man a cripple, were in artillery uniform, and dismounted from their horses for the purpose of doing so. My object in writing is to request that inquiries may be instituted with the view of ascertaining the names of the parties, which I trust may then be furnished to me in order that I may take legal proceedings against them, as already indicated.' To the above letter the Brigade Major replied as follows:—"In reply to your letter, I am directed to inform you that the officer commanding at Meen Meer will do all in his power to assist the civil magistrate in any proceeding he may take against officers and soldiers of the garrison accused of offence punishable by law." This evasive reply has led, I understand, to the matter being laid before higher military authority, whose attention has been drawn to the fact that the Artillery officer was struck over the head by the "cripple's" crutch, and that he has been designated as a coward without taking any steps to vindicate his character. How the matter will eventually end it is difficult to say, but it is quite certain that the fracas is not calculated to increase the good feeling between the military and civil members of the service.

LUCKNOW, Feb. 3.—General MacDuff's fancy ball was a great success. I cannot attempt to give you a detailed description of it, for which I refer you to the local papers. The Chutter Munzil rooms were most tastefully decorated for the occasion—the supper beautiful, and the dancing kept up with such spirit as to leave no doubt on any one's mind of the success of the ball. The Commander-in-Chief arrived at ten o'clock, and was received by General MacDuff and a guard of honour. Dancing commenced and continued until the small hours of morning. There were about ninety ladies and two hundred gentlemen present—the great majority in fancy dresses of every sort of description, from the time of the Flood up to the 19th century. Many of the dresses were superb, and a more brilliant scene has seldom been seen in Lucknow. At supper the healths of her Majesty and the Royal family were proposed and drunk with the usual honours. General MacDuff then proposed "Sir Hugh Rose and the strangers," which drew forth a perfect thunder of applause. The Chief's health was drunk with nine times nine and one cheer more, and it must have proved to him that the feeling towards him in this important part of the Empire is most warm. Indeed, Sir Hugh is a most popular man here with all ranks and classes. But I must not wander from my subject—the ball. The Chief returned thanks in a neat speech, and the happy dancers once more took possession of the boards, and kept up the ball right merrily. The Artillery gave a very nice ball in honour of the Chief on the 29th. It was most successful—arrangements good, and every thing done in right good Lucknow style. There was a very pretty fete on the following day, at Colonel Cambell's Commanding the 49th Regiment, to celebrate the giving away of school and garden prizes by his Excellency. All the elite of Lucknow were present and a recherche tiffin provided. The Commander-in-Chief distributed the prizes, addressing a few words of encouragement to each recipient.—Delhi Gazette.

MEERUT, Jan. 5.—A detachment of the 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade arrived here on Tuesday morning in charge of the married people belonging to the regiment. The head-quarters remain at Agra until the arrival of the Governor-general, when they will proceed with his Excellency to this station. The whole of the troops here paraded yesterday morning at half past six for brigade exercise, under command of Major General Wheeler; the usual field evolutions were gone through, after which the troops marched past, the cavalry and artillery at the trot, and the infantry in grand divisions in quick time, the whole returning to their quarters about nine o'clock with a good appetite for breakfast. A great many spectators were on the ground, the greater number consisting of the softer sex, whose appearance on horseback, wearing (generally) the sort of helmets (not steel) and plumes usually worn by the warriors of old, dashing, helter skelter here, there and everywhere, where danger appeared, gave the whole affair an animating appearance. Major General Wheeler appeared well satisfied with the soldier-like manner in which the different evolutions were gone through.—Delhi Gazette.

CUTTING OFF THE HEADS OF PETITIONERS.—The Rajah of Rewah and Dewan Deobund have ordered the heads of the following persons of Sohagpore, who went down to Calcutta to petition the Governor-General for the restoration of their estates, to be cut off on their return:—Rugbheer Singh, Purhar; Jowahur Singh, Purhar; Luchmun Singh, Bughail; Lulla, Bughail; Hurbhujun, Brahmin; Goothoo, Mussulman. The dwelling houses, crops, and all other property of these unfortunate individuals have been confiscated by Deobund, who has ordered the Rewah policemen to hang them as soon as they are seen entering the territory. The order for their execution, and also confiscation of the property, was issued when the agency existed in Rewah.

THE WYNDHAM OF THE PUNJAB.—The great question of the day amongst the native community has been finally settled, and the estate of the late Rajah Tej Singh divided between his putative infant son and his cousin Sirdar Bhugwan Singh, son of Jemadar Khoosha Singh, whose claims to be the heir of his father have at last been equitably recognised by the Government. He is put in possession of all his father's property in houses, gardens, &c., obtains a separate jagher of 60,000 rupees a year, and for a payment of rupees 25,000 down, renounces all claims for usufruct, &c., against the Rajah's estate. He has not been inaptly styled the Wyndham of the Punjab. He has taken great interest in the railway here, is more frequently on the engine, which he has learnt to drive, than anywhere else, and if he attend to the admonitions of Sir Rob. Montgomery to conduct himself with propriety in other respects, may yet become a useful member of the native community, perhaps magistrate. Why not, after Tej Singh?

THE JYNTIAS.—Our Cherra correspondence, dated the 9th instant, records one or two brushes with the enemy, in which the rebel Jyntias showed that they were not despicable foemen. Possessing but the very rudest weapons of war, they made up for this disadvantage by the strength of their stockades and their personal courage. Our troops came up with a considerable party of them at Um-koi, where a stockade had been constructed on a summit of a hill most difficult of ascent. In the absence of a sufficiency of muskets, bows and arrows, and other projectiles mechanically contrived, they had recourse to stones and everything that could be seized and hurled down upon the troops. The mountain-train battery first had a try at the stockade, but their shot and shell were all wasted upon it; the stockade could not be reached. It was then determined to take it by assault, but here the troops encountered a much stouter resistance than they had calculated on. A number of sepoy's fell badly wounded. Colonel Richardson, who led them, is reported to have had a narrow escape from the blood-thirsty fury of a Jyntia, which charged upon him with a bamboo spike. At the critical moment a sepoy threw himself between his commanding officer and the Jyntia, and, receiving the spike into his own body, died instantaneously. Colonel Richardson was slightly wounded. After a good deal of most resolute climbing the troops carried the stockade; but when they reached it, it was found empty. Another stockade near Nonbaneh was burnt by the rebels, who were apprehensive of an attack. They have escaped to a third stockade, which is said to be very strong, and where they are now reported to be besieged by our troops. There is a rumour that a band of armed rebels has been seen between Cherra and the plains; but their destination is unknown. Altogether the country is in as unsatisfactory a state as it could possibly be, and we wish the authorities well out of their troubles.—Dacca News.

CIVIL CHANGES.—Mr. E. Brandreth, Commissioner of Rawul Pindie, has applied for leave to England for one year, and his place is to be taken for that time by Mr. P. S. Melvill, now officiating at Umritsur. Mr. R. W. Cust, returning to the latter division on Mr. Roberts's resignation of his office of judicial commissioner. We are further informed that Mr. R. H. Davies, Secretary to the Government, Punjab, is about to proceed to England on leave for six months, and that Mr. T. D. Forsyth, now Commissioner of Lahore, will officiate for Mr. Davies, and Captain Pollock, deputy commissioner, takes Mr. Forsyth's place as officiating commissioner.—Delhi Gazette.

LUCKNOW is to have a railway after all. The agent of the Indian Branch Railway Company has undertaken the construction of the railway from Cawnpore via Lucknow to Byram Ghat, or some other convenient spot on the Gogra accessible by steamers. This, it is thought, will establish regular steam navigation on the Gogra. It is also in contemplation, for the general convenience of Oudh and Rohilound, to run a line as direct as possible, passing from Buxar by Azimgurh, Fyzabad, and Seetapore, and thence to Shahjehanpore, Bareilly, and Moradabad, whence it would be prolonged through the Bijnora district to Seharunpore, and will be connected with the East India Railway by the two cross lines now proposed to be undertaken, viz., from Cawnpore to Byram Ghat, and from Moradabad to Koorjah. The East India Branch will have its terminus on the bank of the Ganges at Cawnpore, near to the old European infantry hospital buildings, and the Lucknow line will strike the same bank lower down near the Permit Ghat. It is apparently intended to have the termini of the two railways one on either side of the Ganges opposite to each other with a bridge connection between. Officers are to be deputed at once for the selection of sites.—Delhi Gazette.

SIR C. TREVELYAN.—Since his arrival Sir Charles Trevelyan has not been idle. There are few of the public offices and departments, including the Bank of Bengal, which he has not visited, merely for purposes of inquiry, reviving in some his own experiences as a young Bengal civilian thirty years ago. As was to be expected, he has directed his attention to the working of the Income-tax, having summoned to a conference some of the members, including a non-official, of the Legislative Council of India. But we warn native tax-payers not to jump too rapidly to the conclusion that the tax will be at once abolished. A million and a quarter sterling of revenue is not so easily surrendered at a time when almost every department of our civil administration, especially the judicial and public works, calls for improvement or extension, and when Manchester will agitate in Parliament for a further reduction of the import duties. There is little that is evil in the present Income-tax except its unfairness to the honest European, and he will be the last to urge the surrendering of revenue so important for such a reason. So long as the opium of Bengal rests on its present precarious footing, however much Stamp or Salt duties, or indirect taxation, may be increased, it will be premature to give up the Income-tax without substituting for it some well-considered plan for taxing the wealthy trader and banker. At present all is smiling, and April will see a larger surplus than Mr. Laing contemplated. But our civil administration is starved, and war and drought are always probabilities in India. Other two years of the Income-tax on its present footing will hurt no one, and give the empire breathing-time for further financial reforms.

BALL TO LADY ELGIN.—On Tuesday night Calcutta did a graceful act in welcoming Lady Elgin, and acknowledging the great social courtesy of Lord Elgin, by giving a ball in the Town Hall to her ladyship. Sir Robert Napier well represented the community in his remarks proposing the toast of "Their Excellencies," in which he insisted on the advantage of rulers and ruled meeting together and understanding each other. Lord Elgin, in his reply, told Calcutta that he left the capital for a time, not because he loved it less, but his duty more; for, he said, no mistake is so dangerous to a governor as ignorance of the empire he rules. We doubt not that, when the year of Lord Elgin's probation is past, he will add to his past reputation. He has certainly taken the first step to this, in forming a good understanding with all classes.—Friend of India, Jan. 29.

ABOLITION OF THE OFFICE OF C.-IN-C. OF THE ARMY IN INDIA.—A report, which we have been enabled to trace to an authentic source, was generally current in city yesterday, to the effect that Sir Robert Napier will be nominated Secretary at War, and that the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Army in India will be forthwith done away with, and a separate Commander of the Forces for each Presidency be appointed instead. We are at a loss to understand how this information was received, unless, indeed, the Government have been in possession of it for some days, and it has only now eked out. We give the rumour as we have it, without offering any opinion upon its reliability or otherwise. If correct it would certainly have the merit of getting over a difficulty in about as plausible a manner as can well be conceived, for the appointment of Sir R. Napier as Secretary at War would be virtually superseding Sir Hugh Rose without necessitating the disgrace of a "recal." Of course, his Excellency, in that case, would resign in disgust, and thus the "difficulty" would be got over without recurrence to the more serious alternative. It would certainly be a masterpiece of political and intriguing ingenuity, and to the million would no doubt answer all the purposes intended. But we are, of course, surmising that the rumour has its origin in truth. —Hurkaru, Jan. 22.

GENERAL VAN CORTLANDT.—It appears that General Van Cortlandt has applied for leave of absence to England, but that there is no precedent by which to regulate the conditions of his furlough, and the rate of pay, if any, which he is to receive during his absence from India. This officer, who was in the Sikh service, is locally, or by verbal courtesy or usage, a general; but he does not, strictly speaking, belong to the British military service, nor find a place amongst general officers in the army list. He has done very good service for the Government in very troublous times, and is now well advanced in years; and we hope that he will receive every indulgence and liberal treatment; and, as the treaty saying has it, "be placed upon a footing with the most favoured officers." —Englishman, Jan. 28.

MAJOR-GENERAL FARRELL.—We understand that Major-general Farrell is anxious to relinquish the command of the Mhow division of the army, and proceed to England. The General has had a trying time of it lately, and it is surmised that the unpleasant complications of the "Crawley and Smales" business may have expedited his departure, which, we believe, however, he had previously determined on. There are, we believe, two aspirants in the field for the expected vacancy, of them we may briefly say, Major-general J. Hobson is the senior, but Major-general R. W. Honnor, C.B., is the more distinguished officer. The latter officer, we notice, has only lately arrived from Aden, where he had been acting as political resident and commanding officer, in the place of Brigadier W. Coghill, who has resumed his appointment on arrival from furlough in England. Both of the generals we have named are, consequently, on the "unemployed list" of general officers.

SIR HOPE GRANT AND HIS LUGGAGE.—The following humorous incident took place at the railway station at Allahabad on the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief at Madras:—Sir Hope Grant was unattended, and passing as a private person, and had omitted, it appears, to provide himself with a necessary pass or receipt for his baggage at Cawnpore. On his arrival he wished to clear his luggage, but the guard refused to let it go. Sir Hope looked at the man, and, recognising him to have served under him in China, reminded him of it, and what he would receive if he had thus acted there, and again demanded his baggage, but it was useless—the guard politely informed him that if he were the Governor-General he could not allow his baggage to go without the necessary pass; and his Excellency was obliged to go to the station-master for the pass. Such men as guards are invaluable to the company. —Delhi Gazette.

INDIAN BANKS.—LAHORE, Jan. 24.—The intelligence received by the last English mail regarding the establishment in London of a bank denominated "The Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Bank," has created some sensation here, interfering as it must with the present banking operations of the province. It would seem, from what is known respecting it, that the new bank will be principally, if not entirely, under Indian railway interests, and it will therefore necessarily command the majority, if not the entire, railway patronage throughout those parts of the country in which its branches will be established. This itself, though it may not actually prove a death-blow to existing private banks, must nevertheless place them in an inferior position to that they now occupy. Already have we four banking establishments in the province, viz., the Delhi Bank, the Agra Bank, the Simla Bank, and the Punjab Bank, the latter but recently established. The Agra is very popular, and monopolises the majority of the railway business, beside doing a good trade with the civil and military services. The Delhi is preferred by mercantile firms, especially by the native community, while the remaining two are not extensively known beyond the circle in which they exist, and their transactions are of a limited and local nature. The new bank, therefore, must when fairly started, with its influential directors, entirely eclipse two out of the four of the present institutions, and reduce the profits of the remaining two to a minimum. I don't think that any credit need be attached to the report respecting the late agent of the Punjab Railway being appointed the Indian manager of the concern; this gentleman, rumour says, has already been provided for with the agency of the Euphrates Valley Railway. It affords me pleasure to notice that during the present month charitable revivals have manifested themselves in many of the large towns throughout the Punjab in aid of the Lancashire Relief Fund. At Jullundur, Peshawur, Ferozepoor, and many other places, large meetings have been held and considerable sums collected for this purpose. The military, with their usual generosity, have come forward very liberally; so also have the ladies of Lahore, who are occupied in various ways in the good cause. Still, after all, I don't think the Punjab has done all it might have done towards alleviating the large amount of misery at home; but the way in which the community has recently evinced its sympathy towards the Lancashire operatives, shows the desire to assist, if those in power would only take the lead.

ACQUITTAL OF DENIS HELY.—"The trial of Denis Hely was brought to an abrupt, but, to those who have watched the progress of this prosecution from first to last, not an unexpected termination. The case for the prosecution, after occupying two days, and the greater part of a third, terminated yesterday; and the jury, through their foreman, represented that, so far as they (the jury) were concerned, a determination had been arrived at, to the effect that the case for the Crown had signally failed. The Judge concurred in this view of the matter, and the prisoner was at once discharged. This case is a remarkable one, and we shall not fail to comment upon it on another occasion. To say that a Government prosecution which has taken nine months to elaborate, and has been conducted by the Advocate-general, should break down so lamentably that a jury consider it unnecessary to call upon the counsel for the defence to reply, discloses to our mind an instance of magisterial incapacity unequalled, and simply disgraceful. If a European can be imprisoned for nine months on such evidence as transpired during the trial of Hely all we can say is, that the position of our countrymen in the Mofussil must be insecure indeed. What a striking instance this case affords of the utter worthlessness of evidence taken in Mofussil Courts generally, and particularly in those presided over by officials apparently ignorant of the law, or careless of the way in which it is administered. The expense to the Government of this prosecution must have been considerable, whilst the signal failure of it is unquestionable. We do not envy the position of the committing magistrate, who has been so instrumental in bringing about this, to say the least of it, unwarranted prosecution. We speak, of course, with reference to the evidence as adduced at the trial, and there is no ground for believing otherwise than that this was a repetition of the testimony, originally adduced before the magistrate, and upon which this official based his determination to commit the prisoner for trial. When in possession of some details promised to us, we shall not fail in following up our before-expressed opinion upon the present constitution of Mofussil Courts generally, and some in particular." —Hurkaru. This unfortunate has been kept in a state of suspense since, if we mistake not, the end of 1861. The native press has been loud in its demands for justice, &c., &c. And it ends in the acquittal of the man without his being called upon for a defence!

REDUCTION OF CAVALRY.—We have heard a rumour, not, as we believe, without significance, to the effect that a further cavalry reduction in this presidency is contemplated; and we would advise the officers of the still remaining Bengal Irregular Cavalry corps to guard against being taken by surprise, as we have reason to think that the financiers will soon again be abroad, prowling amongst our military establishments. —Englishman, Jan. 23.

THE FANCY BALL given by the United Service Club last night, was, as is usual with anything of the kind given by the members of that institution, a brilliant success. The invitations were necessarily limited to somewhere about five hundred, and the crowded room showed that few of the invited were absent. Of course the costumes showed but little change from those worn at Government House last week; the ladies looked lovely; the gentlemen were "full of dancing" as the sporting portion of them would have said; the supper was first-rate, and the wines matched it; in short, everything was exactly as it should be, and at the approach of the small hours the guests were still dancing with an evident intention of not going home, though it was morning, "till daylight did appear." —Englishman, Jan. 21.

A VIOLENT STORM AT MUSSOORIE.—"One of the most violent storms came on lately that we have ever experienced. The chief quarter of attack seems to have been the North, though the wind was not at all particular; boxing the compass with impartial ferocity. Serious damage has been done to several houses with thatched roofs. The Club Buildings came in for the chief fury of the gale, most of the thick upper thatching having been blown off, and huge pieces of it deposited on the roads some forty or fifty yards below. Servants' houses, generally so lightly roofed, have been very fairly maltreated also. But many houses close to the edge of the khuds, up which the storm raged, escaped with only a slight ruffling—something after the fashion of terriers going to battle. This comparative immunity, it is believed, is due to the fact that the chief fury of the storm must have been expended just a few feet too high to do serious damage. On the cessation of the storm we had more snow, to a depth of about six inches, on average."

DEAD SNAKES.—The Government of Bengal has curtailed the price of dead snakes from four to two annas! A considerable sum has been allowed annually for the destruction of those deadly, but mayhap not intuite reptiles. An expenditure for the purpose of Rs. 4,000 in the Bancoorah District alone has just been sanctioned. The average yearly expenditure by the Bengal Government under the heading "rewards for killing snakes" has been Rs. 20,000.

LOSS OF THE "BURMAH," "JASON," AND "COLOMBO."—The Madras Times says:—"We have three great steam companies trading to India—the P. and O., the Auxiliary Screw, and the British India—and, within three months, each has lost one of its finest vessels, on well known coasts, without stress of weather, and indeed with no apparent sufficient cause. The Colombo, Jason, and now the Burmah, have been irrecoverably lost under circumstances which would appear to be the most common in the art of navigation. We gave full particulars yesterday of the loss of the Burmah, from which it appears that in the short journey from the Northern Ports, a distance of forty miles was lost in the reckoning, or how could the captain think himself off Madras when he was still many miles the other side of Pulicat. A common fire on shore was mistaken for the revolving Madras light at the top of a high lighthouse; and then, supposing this were the light, the ship is steamed straight on shore, instead of somewhere in the roads. We hear that the report of the examination into the loss of the Jason is before Government, and though not at liberty to divulge its contents, we may say that we believe the public will agree with the opinion of the Court."

HYDERABAD, Jan. 14.—THE NANA.—The Rohillas are at their old work of plundering again. A few days ago a large party of them plundered several Government villages near Cameelpur, and publicly announced their intention of attacking Jughoput, which is in British territory. The resident has applied to the Minister to act against these men, and a detachment of the Hyderabad Contingent has been sent to the place. One of the Nizam's officers, named Dowlat Khan has been murdered on the racecourse, and two men suspected of the murder have been arrested, and are now awaiting trial. There is more news, too, about the Nana. Moodhoo Rao, who was arrested in Bombay by Captain Nuthall, is now awaiting his trial, and letters from the Nana are said to have been found in a bag left by him in the Temple of Siva, where he had hidden himself. In one letter the Nana instructs Moodhoo to excite the people at Hyderabad as much as he can, and to endeavour to induce the Nizam to give him shelter in his dominions. In another letter the Nana describes how he escaped from Central India in the disguise of a dakh runner, how he visited Calcutta in the dress of a Cashmere brahmin, and how he even disposed of Government promissory notes for more than two lakhs to certain Burra bazaar merchants at a considerable discount. There are seven prisoners now in Hyderabad gaol charged with sedition. Great scarcity of grain is still felt, and the Nizam has forbidden the exportation of grain. In spite of this, however, wheat and grain are cheaper here than in any other part of India.

THE MONEY MARKET.—For the week ending the 14th inst. the return of the assets and liabilities of the Bank, compared with that of the 30th of December, shows the following more marked fluctuations, viz. :—

A decrease in the Government balances of	Rs. 14,87,843
A decrease in private deposits of	6,44,510
A decrease in Bank post bills of...	2,18,555
A decrease in loans on securities of	...
An increase in bills discounted of	3,98,047
An increase in bills discounted of	4,54,532
A decrease in Bank's reserve of...	8,42,032

The above return indicates no change of any great moment since our last report. Money continues easy, and in fair demand at former rates. A few private houses are lending on call at one-half per cent. under the Bank. Nothing can make more apparent to English readers the buoyant and elastic state of the revenue of India than the fact that, notwithstanding the large home demands on the Treasury by her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, and the heavy outgoings for local disbursement, the diminution in the gross amount of the cash balances is comparatively insignificant. One great source of past, as well as of prospective augmentation of the public revenue, is traceable to the opium sales. With an increase of nearly a thousand chests at each monthly sale, the drug continues to command the same price which it fetched when the smaller quantity only was brought to market. Thus in December two thousand four hundred chests realised somewhat over £350,000, while 3,300 chests sold in January returned nearly £450,000. Making allowance for the increased cost of cultivation and other necessary outlays, we have still a gain on the first sale for 1864 of £53,000, compared with that of the immediately preceding month. Nor is this all, for the December price was, be it remembered, nearly Rs. 300 per chest in excess of the Budget estimate by Mr. Laing. The rates of dividend declared by the three Presidency Banks for the past half-year on the respective paid-up capitals are as under, viz. :
 The Bank of Bengal, 12 per cent. per annum.
 The Bank of Bombay, 11 per cent. per annum.
 The Bank of Madras, 10 per cent. per annum.

It appears that the amended Currency Bill, shorn of the more dangerous principles which it contained when first introduced by the late Mr. Wilson, progresses satisfactorily. The policy of the directors in establishing a sound system of banking throughout India by the further extension of the Bank's branches, we, in common with our contemporaries, hail with approval, as meeting a want which no note currency, however sound, can, per se, ever supply.—Madras Athenæum, Jan. 28.

RELIEF FOR LANCASHIRE.—As befits the present season, gaiety has been the order of the day at the Presidencies and in the chief Mofussil stations of India during the past fortnight, but gaiety mainly devoted to a better purpose than that of the mere enjoyment of the participants in it. Charity has prompted European society to make its entertainments contribute handsomely towards the fund for the relief of the distressed Lancashire operatives. The amateurs of Madras have devoted their vocal and histrionic talents and accomplishments to the furtherance of that good object, and with marked success: ladies as well as gentlemen assisting in the concerts given. That which came off at the banqueting room on the evening of the 24th inst. was attended by a very numerous and distinguished audience, and proved a rare treat to all lovers of good music. Equally satisfactory in the dramatic line was the performance of the amateurs of H.M.'s 69th Regiment in the College Hall on the night previous. All the performers acquitted themselves admirably, to the delight of the spectators, whose number would have been far greater than it was, had not the very limited accommodation furnished by the building prevented a large number of the ticket holders from gaining admission. It is understood that the gallant amateurs mediate another dramatic effort in support of the same philanthropic cause, and will, if possible, find a more commodious scene of action; but saving the banqueting hall, the fitting up of which would be a serious affair, even should his Excellency the Governor grant the use of it for the purpose, we know not where more suitable premises can be found. The Dramatic Society are likewise going to devote their energies to a performance of the same kind, early next month; but with a view of getting over the difficulty of narrow accommodation, they intend to perform two nights in succession, so as to give those who cannot find room on the first occasion liberty to take advantage of the second. Their plan is a good one, and we trust that they will command a double bumper. Our presidency has likewise been enlivened by the "Evenings at Home" of that distinguished vocalist and representative of character, Mr. Black, well known at home and in the colonies for his remarkable talent and finished musical cultivation. He came hither from Ceylon, and has now left this for Calcutta, where he will doubtless meet with a brilliant reception. That received here pleased him so well that he contemplates paying us another visit on his way back to Europe. The Madras races, which have partly come off within a few days past, must also be recorded as among the exhilarating sports of the fortnight. The City of Palaces has been indulging in festivities akin to those above mentioned, and, of course, on a much larger and more magnificent scale, especially since the arrival there of Lady Elgin, who entertained all the society of the city at a fancy ball the other night, which is said to have exceeded in splendour any previously given at Government-house.—Madras Athenæum.

BOMBAY.

APPEAL TO THE ENGLISH NATION ON BEHALF OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

The extinction of the Indian Navy without a complaint, by the exhibition of a little generosity to its officers, furnishes a powerful illustration of the error in which the amalgamation of the armies was conceived. About the time this summary will arrive at home a final effort will be made in Parliament to obtain redress for the wrongs inflicted upon the army by that measure. Sir Charles Wood must himself be aware by this time that from the unworthy spirit in which it was conceived, very great injustice has been inflicted upon numberless officers of the old local army. It is unworthy of the Secretary of State to affect ignorance of a fact, that a little attentive consideration must make clear to every unprejudiced person. Under the ascendancy of counsels, happily thrown aside in the case of the Indian navy, the claims of the army, instead of being viewed in a spirit of indulgence, have been fought inch by inch, in the spirit of pettifogging attorneyship, to the disgrace of the nation and the disgust of every right-minded and well-informed man in this country. From the moment when it was determined to carry this scheme out, common sense and right feeling dictated that the most scrupulous and even chivalrous care should be shown for the interests affected thereby. Instead of this, and in open violation of express parliamentary guarantee, we have seen the claims of the army sifted, scanned, and denied, with a persistent dishonesty common enough in a low attorney's office, but happily seldom exemplified in the bureau of a Secretary of State.

Sir Charles Wood may honestly plead, as some excuse for this error, the past state of the Indian finances. We are disposed to allow full weight to that excuse, the more so that advantage has clearly been taken of returning ease, to avoid it in the case of the navy; the abolition of which, as we have said, has been carried without a murmur, owing to the wise liberality with which the claims of its officers have been met. It is not yet too late for the Ministry to redeem the former error. Instead of opposing the formation of a committee, let the Ministry frankly join in recommending the House to institute it. Personally, Sir C. Wood must feel upon this subject as every other Englishman feels. If no wrong has been done, the fact can be made plain to the country; but if wrong has been done, the Secretary of State must himself, as an English gentleman, be anxious to see it redressed. The apologists of the amalgamation scheme insist that no injury has been inflicted upon, nor injustice sustained by, the army; at all events, no such injury as calls for redress. On the other hand, we are overwhelmed by complaints from those who, wearing the shoe, know where it pinches. The shoe fits to perfection, according to the Home Ministry, and in the opinion of H.E. Sir William Mansfield; and if Indian officers are so unreasonable as to complain that it hurts them, their murmurs, we are told, should be treated as "the grumblings of disaffected men." We protest, for the honour of our country, against so monstrous a course.

Unfortunately, the Indian army has not produced a single man able to give a clear and concise account of the manner in which the measure has interfered with the prospects of so many of its officers. And yet that great injury has been inflicted upon large numbers of these gentlemen, and in some cases absolute ruin, may be very clearly shown; and would certainly be made plain to the committee, which we trust to see appointed this session. What, then, are the grievances of which the local army complain? Passing over cases of special injury which probably could not be avoided, it will be found that nine-tenths of the complaints against the amalgamation are as follows:—

First, That whereas the old service was one of strict seniority, the formation of the staff corps leads to the wholesale supersession of senior officers by their juniors.

Second, That whereas the practice of purchasing promotion was expressly allowed and encouraged under the old system, it has been completely stopped under the new.

These are the grievances for the redress of which the old local army appeals to the Legislature, and to the exposition of which we shall now address ourselves.—Times of India, Feb. 12.

THE P. AND O. STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY'S VESSELS being no longer allowed to call off Jubal, the Telegraph to India Company has closed its station at that place. The wire between Suez and Alexandria has been leased to Messrs. Glass, Elliot and Company (the lessees of the Malta and Alexandria Telegraph), who do not propose to continue the Eastern agencies. Under these circumstances no further messages will be received by their agent in Bombay. Merchants and others using the Egyptian wire in future will have to do so under an arrangement with Messrs. Glass, Elliot & Co., making a deposit with the Bank of Egypt in London or Alexandria, from which the cost of telegrams will be taken. Such messages should be posted to Suez addressed to the Superintendent, Telegraph Station, Suez.—Times of India, Feb. 13.

JOODPORE, Jan. 10.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief arrived here on the morning of the 17th inst., and en route was received with all honours by the Chief of Serohi, the Eripooora Irregulars, and at Pallee, the khalsa or Crown property of the Joodpore state—which town has grown up like a modern Palmyra, in the desert, in a sterile tract of Marwar. A few Parsees have established themselves there, and are making a deal of money in buying up cotton and wool, but chiefly by the latter, which is to be purchased in abundance, and of tolerably good quality. The Commander-in-Chief's entree in Joodpore was, of course, made a deal of by the Maharaja, and in something after the manner of the kings of Europe in the olden time. First and foremost, at the head of some thousands of armed followers, Sir William was met by the Maharaja's four eldest sons, all fine looking young men, and who, in the true Rajpoot style, were belted and armed and mounted on prancing and showy horses, welcomed in the name of their father Maharaja Tukht Singh, his Excellency to Joodpore and Marwar; and then caracoling their steeds to the right and left, the Maharajah, seated on a richly caparisoned elephant, and followed by his officers of state, advanced and also greeted and welcomed Sir William Mansfield, and then together proceeded on to the city, where they parted company, the Maharaja to his palace, situated in the citadel which overlooks the town, and which is divided from it by a rampart on the brow of an ascent 870 feet high above the plain. The palace, however, overtops all other buildings, and its highest part is said to be some 454 feet above the level of the surrounding country. The Commander-in-Chief accompanied Major Nixon, the political agent, to the Residency. In the evening his Excellency made a state visit to the Maharajah, which was followed on the succeeding morning by the usual Meeaswani, consisting of some half a dozen trays of sweetmeats, fruit, flour, sugar, almonds, &c., to each of the Sahib-logue, and a pukka seer of metal to every native in the camp. On the 10th his Highness the Maharaja returned the Commander-in-Chief's visit, and in the course of the day the Maharaja, who is a great sportsman, took his Excellency out to his shikargur pig-sticking, when three fine sized boars hit the dust. Sir William, en passant, I may observe, is no novice at this kind of sport, for it is only a week ago that he and another gentleman chased and rode down a black buck to death with their spears. Tomorrow morning we leave for Ajmeer, where we expect to be about the 26th, and Nusseerabad the 28th inst., by a route taken by the 3rd Troop Bombay Horse Artillery in 1858, and shall always retain a pleasing remembrance of Joodpore, its Maharaja, and people, who one and all treated us with the greatest of civility and kindness.—Bombay Times.

DIVORCE COURTS.—It may be interesting "to those about to marry," as well as to those who are so committed, to notice that an Act is now passing through the Legislative Council of India to establish Divorce Courts in this country, upon the model for the most part of Sir Cresswell Cresswell's too-famous Court at Westminster Hall. We regret to see, however, that parties are not to have the option of having disputed facts decided on by juries, as is the case in England, and as it appears Sir Matthew Sausse recommended here. The reason given is the bad one that we have no juries in any civil cases in India. It is true we have not, but we ought. At least suitors should be entitled to the option of having them or not as they please. We are surprised to hear that a majority of the judges of the several High Courts of India are against allowing this option. Judges are generally but too happy to be rid of the responsibility of settling more than they must. But it seems that is not the way with the majority of the highest judges in India, or is it that they have so much contempt for the ancient "palladium of our rights," &c., &c.?

DEPARTURE OF THE "STAR OF INDIA."—This splendid frigate built ship left our harbour on Tuesday, the 29th ult., under novel and pleasing circumstances—novel as she was the first ship towed out of our harbour by steam, and the honour of doing so rested with the little prince of Lilliputs, the screw steamer Pehlwan, of only seventy-three tons, and she had the double honour of drawing her mighty sister out to sea. At two o'clock the little steamer got alongside, and soon made fast the stout hawser that linked the little cockle shell to her colossal consort. On board the Star of India were embarked two hundred and seventy soldiers of her Majesty's various regiments, ten women and twenty children, and eight officers with their families, proceeding to England. On board all were anxiety, especially when the tiny steamer shot ahead at 3.15 p.m. Gradually the great ship moved and glided along, passing the light-house and inner light at 4.15 p.m. The little Pehlwan succeeded so far and so well as to get the Star of India abreast of the outer light ship; having got her so far to seaward, and all being now ready, and a small breeze blowing, the tow line was cast off. All on board crowded the bulwarks to bid a long farewell to the shores of India, where many of them deserving of well-earned honours left many a poor comrade behind, many for ever gone, and others to follow in their wake, India behind and England before. All were in the enjoyment of their best wishes, a safe return to their native land—"good old England." They have a fine ship, a skillful commander, and with such adjuncts we wish them a safe, a short, and prosperous voyage. Three cheers were given on parting, which was returned by the gallant crew of the little Pehlwan, and again returned and lost in the distance by the tide and wind that carried the good ship Star of India, her gallant commander, and her noble band of veterans. The Pehlwan was in command of Capt. J. M. Beck, under the special superintendence of Captain E. Gillett.—Bombay Times, Feb. 13.

LANCASHIRE RELIEF FUND.—We gladly publish the following correspondence between his Highness the Thakore of Bhownuggur and his Excellency the Governor of Bombay, on the subject of the very handsome contribution of ten thousand rupees made to the Lancashire Relief Fund by the Thakore. This is the third contribution made by this enlightened prince and the members of his Court, to the relief of the suffering operatives of Lancashire. It is an example that we hope will be imitated by the other chiefs of Kattywar and Western India in general. To his Excellency Sir H. B. E. Frere, K.C.B.—Your Excellency, I have heard with more sorrow than I can express of the severe sufferings entailed upon the workmen of England by the great war that is being prosecuted in America. My sympathy for these unfortunate men, who have sustained their sufferings with patient fortitude that has awakened the admiration not only of their own countrymen, but of the world, is enhanced by the reflection that my own country, and the subjects especially of my own dominions, are profiting largely by the event that has proved so disastrous to them. I take the liberty, therefore, of requesting that your Excellency will be pleased to receive through my agent in Bombay, Mr. Merwanjee Nusserwanjee, the sum of Rs. 10,000 for transmission to England in aid of the fund for the relief of this sad distress, as a contribution from myself and the members of my court. I am sure that your Excellency, who has taken but lately so prominent a part in the proceedings at Bombay in connection with this great charity, will excuse the trouble I am giving you.—Allow me to remain, your Excellency's most faithful friend, RAWUL JUSWUNTSINGEE, Bhownuggur, 8th Dec., 1862. To his Highness Thakore Rawul Juswuntsingee, of Bhownuggur. YOUR HIGHNESS,—I have received your esteemed letter dated the 8th December last, enclosing an order for the sum of Rs. 10,000, being a contribution on the part of your Royal Highness and the members of your court towards the relief of the lamentable distress now prevailing in the manufacturing districts of England. In reply, I beg to express the great gratification with which I have received this token of your Highness' generous sympathy with the sufferings of the working classes in Lancashire. Accept my best wishes for your continued happiness and prosperity.—Your sincere friend, H. B. E. FRERE, Bombay Castle, 20th Jan. 1863.

BURIAL OF THE DEAD.—Mr. Tristram's Bill for preventing the burial, burning, or exposure of the dead, in Bombay, has been withdrawn. The native members are, of course, very strongly opposed to it, and many who approve the principle of the Bill think (as we do) that Mr. Tristram has been into great a hurry to introduce it. The subject is one which may be very usefully discussed in the newspapers; but it is not yet ripe for legislation. Mr. Tristram seems to have forgotten that, in making laws, some regard should be had to their consequences. If he has not done so, we should like to know by what means he intends to have the dead conveyed out of Bombay at present. The Indu Prakash had a very good article on subject the other day, appealing to the Christians to discard their superstitious prejudices about burying the dead, and give up this abominably unwholesome practice, in order to adopt the cleanly Hindu fashion of burning dead bodies. The appeal is very reasonable. The Christian and Mahomedan mode of disposing of the dead is the worst that can be conceived—indeed, we much doubt if the custom would ever have prevailed among civilised beings if it had not, unhappily, received the sanction of religion.

ALBERT MEDICAL AND FAMILY ENDOWMENT LIFE ASSURANCE.—We have been asked to congratulate the holders of participation policies in the Albert Medical and Family Endowment Life Assurance Company on the bonus now announced. We don't mind going in for a little bit of "puff" now and then; but we draw the line before coming to life assurance companies, whose business is of much too serious a nature to be trifled with. We want to see the directors of all these insurance companies take policyholders more into their confidence than they now do. Let them publish in full the reports of actuaries and auditors, and, above all, let us see their accounts in detail, so that we may know precisely what they are doing with the money entrusted to their keeping, upon the most solemn trust that can be reposed in men. We have long advocated this publicity of accounts, and as yet with small success; but we shall persevere, and when policyholders come to know their interests and their duty, they will join us, and at last right must be done.—Bombay Times.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE appointed to consider and report on a "Bill to promote the construction of Lines of Communication as Feeders to Railways, High Roads, Navigable Rivers, and Canals," have reported that, having compared the provisions of the Bill with those of a Bill for accomplishing the same objects which it is intended to introduce into the Council of the Governor-general of India, they find that all the essential parts of the Bombay draft have been embodied in the proposed general enactment. They, therefore, recommend the withdrawal of the present Bill, adding only an expression of their hope that the general enactment may be passed with the least possible delay.

TELEGRAPH BETWEEN GALLE AND BOMBAY.—It may be hoped that the formation of a second line of telegraphic communication on such important routes as that between Galle and Bombay, will put an end to the frauds which have made the Electric Telegraph Department stink in the nostrils of the public. We are glad to learn that the intended reform is due to the energetic remonstrances of the Bombay Government.—Bombay Saturday Review, Feb. 7.

H.R.H. PRINCE ARTHUR.—It is stated that H.R.H. Prince Arthur has been appointed to a commission in H.M.'s 33rd Regiment, which leaves Bombay for Poonah early next month, and that he will forthwith join his regiment, and serve with it for three years. What lends probability to the rumour is that the Prince, [as godson of the Duke of Wellington, would very appropriately commence his military career as an officer in the 33rd, which is the Duke's own regiment. Should it be our good fortune to have a real live prince come amongst us, we may expect that the loyal society of Bombay will desert the island altogether for the favoured station of Poonah, and that, in consequence, rents will fall here, which will be a very agreeable result of the princely visitation.—Bombay Saturday Review.

FREIGHTS.

To London—Cotton, £3. 10s. to £4; Seeds, £3.
To Liverpool—Cotton, £3. 10s. to £3. 15s.; Seeds, £3.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Feb. 12).—There has been a continuance of demand from up-country in the bazaar during the fortnight, under the influence of which prices have gradually hardened, and our quotations for Grey Goods are again, in almost all instances, considerably above those of our last. Within the last day or two there has also been some slight inquiry making by speculators. Certain descriptions of Shirtings, as 36-inch and 46-inch goods, are becoming scarce, and holders are, as a rule, indifferent about selling. The daily clearances from the native bazaar we have heard variously estimated at from 300 to 500 packages of Grey Goods a day, but in any case there can be no doubt that a considerable impression has already been made upon stocks, and as there appears to be every likelihood that during the remainder of the season there will be an equally healthy demand before the monsoon, we shall probably see a great scarcity of many descriptions of staple goods. Glasgow and other fancy goods within the last few days show signs of improvement, and as the hot weather approaches, are likely further to advance.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Feb. 13).—Cotton.—There were slight fluctuations in the prices during the fortnight, but the market closes firm, with a good demand, notwithstanding the adverse advices from Liverpool. Wool.—The limited stock has caused the dealers to ask for higher rates. Seeds.—Linedseed has been in more active demand at higher figures, the present quotations being Rs. 6-4 as to Rs. 6-4½. Rapeseed is in limited demand at Rs. 7-2 to Rs. 7-4. Other seeds are quiet and unchanged. Coffee.—Malabar is well supplied, and can be had on easier terms. Gums.—Benjamin is quoted higher; other sorts are lower. Furs.—These have participated in the general improvement, and have been in excellent demand at higher quotations for almost all counts. Metals.—The market continues dull.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.

No. 19 of 1862-63.—In accordance with para. 1 of printed circular, No. 1,309, dated Sept. 12, 1860, and with reference to notification of this dept., No. 14, of Sept. 24 last, the following further orders of the Supreme Govt. relative to med. officers, is published for general information:—

From the Hon. E. Drummond, Secy. to the Govt. of India, financial dept., to the officiating civil paymtr., Madras.

Financial Dept., Fort William, Council Chamber, Jan. 8.—No. 167g.—Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 1,411 of Oct. 8, 1862, inquiring with reference to financial resolution No. 391g of Sept. 4 preceding, which divides med. officers in civil employ into two classes,* whether officers attached to "public institutions," such as hospitals and infirmaries, should be placed in the 2nd class, and how the following appts. should be classified:—

1, presidency (dist.) surgs.; 2, physician of the general hospital; 3, surg. of ditto; 4, superint. of the eye infirmary; 5, superint. of the lying-in hospital; 6, zillah or civil surgs. in the provinces; 7, residency surgs. (political); 8, medical officers on the Neilgherries; 9, med. officers in charge of civil engr's dept. in the Godavery and Kistnah dists., 10, principal of the med. college; 11, professor of med. college; 12, chemical examiner.

2. In reply, I am desired to explain that the expression "officers attached to public institutions," &c., in the definition of the 2nd class was intended to distinguish officers employed in teaching the theory of medicine from officers engaged in the practice of medicine, who belong to the 1st class, and to state that all the appts. above mentioned belong to the 1st class, with the exception of numbers 10 and 11, which should be placed in the second.

I have the honour to be, &c.
(Signed) EDMOND DRUMMOND,
Secy. to the Govt. of India.

MILITARY ON DITS.—The 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade marched into Agra on the 8th Nov. This regiment is to form part of the Viceroy's escort.

—The 16th Bengal Cavalry at Jhansi expect to be relieved by the 15th Cavalry in a very few days, when they will march for Erispootah, in Rajpootana. Brigadier Welchman returned to Gwalior a few days ago.—No. 3 Battery 16th Brigade, under Captain Marshall, marched out of the station towards Allahabad, Feb. 2, and B

Battery 2nd Brigade, under Capt. Stallard, came in from Morar to join the Governor-general's escort, after which it will be stationed at Meerut.

—The march of E. Battery 16th Brigade Royal Artillery to Allahabad is postponed until further orders.—The 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade left Subathoo en route to Delhi on the 2nd February.

They will arrive at Umballah to-morrow, and resume their march on the 8th Feb.

THE APPOINTMENT OF QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY will be vacant on the 18th proximo, Major-General A. Becher going out "by effluxion of time." The appointment is one of those the tenure of office of which is five years; but on the formation of the Staff Corps Sir Charles Wood gave an additional two years to officers holding staff appointments and entering the Staff Corps. Major-General Becher was spoken of for the Benares divisional command; but, as will be seen below, it is conferred upon another officer, and Major-General Becher goes out of employment. We believe that the promotions in the Quartermaster General's Department will not this time go by routine; and we have heard some rumours of an outsider stepping to its head.

E. I. RAILWAY COMPANY.—We hear that for the convenience of passengers booked for long journeys, the E. I. Railway Company intend to construct a few first-class sleeping carriages along the line. It is also rumoured that some third-class zenana carriages will be built expressly for the Hindoo and Mahomedan females who object to railway travelling, owing to their religious scruples to expose themselves to the gaze of the public.

PORT DUES AT SINGAPORE.

THE merchants of Singapore are in a state of some anxiety on account of the proposed levy of port dues in all the ports of the Straits Settlement. The Chamber of Commerce has been called upon to furnish the Government with their opinion on the subject. The Chamber is said to be decidedly hostile to the proposal, for if the Straits lost its claim to "free ports," it would be extremely injurious to the interests of the local mercantile community. If the Local Government insist upon the present scheme, the European inhabitants of the Straits will appeal to the British Parliament.

A ROMAN RUIN IN LONDON.

MR. T. WRIGHT has lately laid before the British Archaeological Association his report of a visit to a spot in the heart of London of high historical interest—the site of the late East India House in Leadenhall-street, so long the Parliament and vast Counting-House of a body of mighty merchant princes who for so long a period wielded one of the widest sovereignties in the world; and, upon the whole, with such administrative ability, and wisdom, and justice, and liberality as, in spite of many deplorable errors and deficiencies, served to elevate and magnify and render still more conspicuous the already matchless political power and commercial greatness of the British nation. Twenty feet below the level of the present surface in Leadenhall-street the floor and walls of a Roman residence have been discovered. These relics of the olden time, when Rome was the Ruler of the World, and our own country comparatively barbarous and insignificant, found below the seat of a part of the great political and commercial power, to which Rome, in its turn, is now so immeasurably inferior in everything that can make a nation noble and potent, afford a truly interesting illustration of the mutable nature of all human glory. They remind us, too, of Macaulay's famous future New Zealander meditating on the ruins of London. Some portions of the Roman walls now excavated are said to be in a very perfect state of preservation.

SALE OF WASTE LANDS.

THE Government of India, in the sale of waste land, has always insisted very emphatically on the grantees' thorough clearance of the jungle on it. This injunction has, in many cases, been carried too far, so that noble trees have sometimes been cut down as unscrupulously as the most closely complicated underwood. This is an extreme that should be very carefully guarded against, because a certain quantity of good-sized trees, not too closely grown or planted, is known to improve the climate of a country and to preserve the requisite amount of shade and moisture. In India there is already but a very scanty supply left of timber trees for the building of ships and houses, and Indian wood is now so expensive that it is said that timber is more cheaply imported from Norway than purchased in Calcutta. This is one of the causes of the rapidly-increasing rise of house-rent in Bengal. The Government has at last taken the alarm, and seems determined to save some of the Indian forests that yet remain unlevelled. A forest conservator is to be immediately appointed for the Bengal Presidency.

THE LATE LORD CANNING'S PAPERS.

MR. J. W. KAYE, who is about to write, or has commenced writing, the "History of the Indian Mutiny," has been furnished with the most important of the late Lord Canning's papers, and with many other documents of great historical value. Mr. Kaye has won too high a reputation as an Anglo-Indian historian to stand in need of our good word on this occasion. His account of the "War in Affghanistan," his "Life of Lord Metcalfe," and several other works connected with India, are fine examples of the style in which history should be written. They are full of facts made as interesting as the liveliest fictions—of truths most eloquently told, of pathetic or stirring narratives, and of descriptions that glow with hues as faithful and vivid as those on the gifted painter's canvas. The Friend of India says that Mr. Kaye "has long meditated a History of India more deserving of the name than the weary disquisitions of Mill and the careless compilation of Thornton." We think justice might have been done to Mr. Kaye without this depreciation of other writers; but even Mr. Kaye himself does not obtain unqualified praise from his Calcutta critic, who censures him for great delay in the fulfilment of his literary pledges. "He long ago," says the Friend of India, "undertook to prepare a work on the Lives of the Governors-general of India, not one volume of which has yet seen the light." Mr. Kaye is anything, however, but a lazy writer. Few men are more industrious, and those who know how his time is occupied as a secretary and as an historian, are astonished at the amount of work he has already accomplished, so honourably to himself, and so satisfactorily to the Government and to the public.

NEW COLOMBO PERIODICAL.

THE Colombo Observer notices a new local publication, called the "Literary Association Magazine." It is not stated whether it is to be published monthly or quarterly or half-yearly or yearly. We suppose it to be a monthly periodical. The contents of the first number, published in January, are said to be of a character to justify the Colombo Observer in congratulating the editor of the magazine on having begun well a good work—"very much superior to any previous attempt of the kind;" which commendation is intended, we suppose, to have a strictly local reference, for it can hardly be meant that this Ceylon periodical is superior to all other periodicals in all other countries. An article on "Kandian Criminal Law" is very highly praised, and pronounced the best paper in the number. Another on the Mechanics of Ceylon is said to contain some sensible remarks, "which may lead," says the Colombo Observer, "Christian young men to take into their serious consideration some means for the temporal and spiritual improvement of 'this degraded class.'" The Bishop of Colombo, compassionating their condition, is about to establish for their benefit "a ragged-school." Though the general character of the magazine is highly estimated, one or two of the articles are described as more or less objectionable. "A Gossiping Letter from Mark Tapley" is said to touch on topics beyond the legitimate limits of a magazine like the new periodical, and to be "rather weak" in the treatment of those topics. And an article on Poetry is open, it is said, to very severe strictures. It is indeed so bad that the Colombo Observer recommends the writer the next time he puts pen to paper to have an English dictionary before him, and tells him that when he becomes more familiar with the use of words and phrases he will probably produce a better paper.

BURMESE PRIZE MONEY.—TREATIES WITH INDIAN PRINCES.

IN reply to a question in the House of Commons from Colonel North, Sir Charles Wood, on Thursday, the 26th ult., said, that there had been some mistake with regard to the distribution of the Burmese prize money, the cause of which he could not ascertain. The warrant authorising the distribution was sent out in October, 1860. In 1861 there was an announcement made in India that no application was to be received after the end of that year, and in conformity with that order a similar notice was published in this country. The distribution, it seems, had been delayed in consequence of the Government not having received the prize-roll. That has at length been duly received, and the money will soon be distributed amongst the men who have obtained medals. On the same evening Mr. H. Baillie moved the following resolution:—

"That whereas by a royal proclamation addressed to the native princes and peoples of India, published the 1st day of November, 1858, it is stated: 'That we desire no extension of our present territorial possessions, and while we will permit no aggression upon our dominions or our rights to be attempted with impunity, we shall sanction no encroachment in those of others;' and again, 'We hereby announce to the native princes of India that all treaties and engagements made with them by or under the authority of the Honourable East India Company are by us accepted, and will be scrupulously maintained;' so, in the opinion of this House, where differences of opinion have arisen with respect to the interpretation of such treaties, the questions at issue ought to be referred for decision to her Majesty's Privy Council."

The royal proclamation referred to, said Mr. Baillie, contributed very materially to the pacification of India, and therefore its promises ought to be very faithfully and honourably fulfilled. He charged the Secretary of State for India with having violated those promises. He instanced the case of the Nawab of the Carnatic, one of whose ancestors had been a friend in need and a friend indeed to the East India Company. But as Lord Wellesley had discovered in the Palace at Seringapatam a treasonable correspondence between the Nawab's uncle and the Mysore

Princes, his lordship compelled the Nawab to sign a treaty by which he made over four-fifths of his territory to the East India Company, and also the entire administration of the Carnatic upon condition that the Company would guarantee to him the remaining fifth portion of territory for life. Mr. Baillie contended that the charge of treasonable correspondence was not proved. When the Nawab of the Carnatic died, in 1855, Lord Dalhousie took possession of his territory, and of the personal and private property of the family, on the ground that the treaty was a forced treaty, and had only a personal reference to the Nawab. "It did not seem," said Mr. Baillie, "to occur to Lord Dalhousie that if the treaty was invalid we lost our only claim to the right to take possession of the country." The Nawab, who signed the treaty of 1801, died in 1819. That therefore would have been the right time to make our claim, if we had any. The son of the Nawab was permitted quietly to take his father's place, and no new treaty was proposed. Six years after this the next successor inherited the same position. During his minority his uncle was regent. The nephew died, and the uncle claimed the right to succeed him. The Company refused to recognise the claim, and that refusal had been confirmed by Sir Charles Wood. Mr. Baillie thought that when such questions arose regarding the rights of native princes they should be referred not to the Secretary of State for India or the Indian Government, who were parties interested, but to her Majesty's Privy Council. The motion was seconded by Mr. Smollett, who did not confine his observations to the case of the Nawab of the Carnatic, but went at great length into other cases, such as those of the King of Oude, the Rajah of Sattara, the Rajah of Nagpore, and the Rajah of Tanjore. If the instances of spoliation and tyranny brought forward by Mr. Baillie and Mr. Smollett were not grossly exaggerated by their zealous eloquence, they certainly made out a strong case against British rule in India; but these matters have not now been discussed for the first time, and just and honourable men had taken very different views of the matter from those entertained by Messrs. Baillie and the seconder of his motion.

Sir Charles Wood denied that there had been any violation of the royal promises to the people of India, and objected to the proposition to refer Indian treaties to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as inexpedient and unconstitutional. They should rest with Government, which in cases of the kind referred to took the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, and the opinion of the House might be given on the course adopted. These pensioned princes he thought were very much in everybody's way. Without power or authority they fancied that they had rights which one day they might recover, and discontented natives were always ready to make use of their names in the hour of danger. For what was done in 1855, on the death of the Nawab of the Carnatic, he (Sir Charles Wood) could not be answerable, for he was not in his present office. He thought the Queen's proclamation a very wise one, but he did not think it required him to undo that had been done half-a-century ago.

This is a brief and imperfect summary of a very long debate, but as the subjects have been so well handled before there was too little novelty in the discussion to justify our giving up a larger portion of our space to Mr. Baillie's abortive motion. When the House divided it was rejected by a large majority—that is, by 104 against 24.

BOOKS.

Alvin of Erie; or, the Mourner's Choice. By Ben. Franklin Langford. Lahore: Printed at the Chronicle Press, by Mahomed Azeem. 1854.

In the Delhi Gazette of 10th January, 1863, we find a notice of a book by Ben. Franklin Langford, entitled "The Steam and the Wire," and "The Vision of a Godless World;" the latter being a translation in verse from the German of Jean Paul Richter. The Delhi paper commences its notice with the following rather pompous announcement:—"Among Indian celebrities stands a name not unknown to fame." That a celebrity should not be unknown is surely not a fact so extremely singular and striking as this oracular sentence apparently implies. Descending from his stilts, the Delhi critic explains that Mr. Benjamin Langford is the person he alludes to. "Of Mr. Langford's history and antecedents," says the Delhi Gazette, "we know nothing;" an admission not very complimentary to himself, nor exactly truthful or consistent. A public writer ought to know something of "a celebrity known to fame." The Delhi Gazette reviewer does know something of the author; for he tells us that Mr. Langford is a gunner who has been tried and punished, not for a strictly military offence, but for writing in the papers. What the nature of Mr. Langford's offensive newspaper lucubrations may have been is not explained, though we gather from the fact of his having been punished for his effusions, and from the remark that "It will probably be asserted with a sneer that Gunner Langford is a mere scribbler, who can write nothing better than querulous letters to a newspaper," that he is as wrongly combative in the field of literature as he may be rightly combative in the field of war, where our poetical cannonier or author militant sends forth somewhat more substantial and noisy elements of destruction than the paper pellets of the brain. That he has talent, however, of a high order—nay, something more than mere talent; "evident genius"—is strongly asserted by his critic. We shall neither second nor oppose this proposition just now, but enter an immediate protest against the ill-founded observation, that in these days many will turn aside with contempt from the productions of a man in so humble a station as that of a gunner, and that the time has not yet passed when a man can afford to disregard the quality of his coat. This is so far from being the truth that scarcely a month passes in which some poor poetaster is not petted and patronised and absurdly over-estimated merely on account of his being a ploughman or a mechanic who has neglected his proper occupation to scribble senseless and unprofitable verses. Have we not had versifying cobblers and milkmaids by the score forced by injudicious patrons into temporary notice? Have not many of the unhappy scribblers outlived their notoriety and died in obscurity and wretchedness? Pope boasted very justly that "He left no calling for his idle trade,

No duty broke, no father disobeyed."

Pope had the rare felicity to measure correctly his own powers. Many a man, however, who might have risen to wealth and distinction in some of the ordinary pursuits of life, loses all chance of competence and comfort, and at last dies a pauper, by a perverse or ignorant misdirection of his faculties in a long and unrequited courtship of the muse. We by no means think that Mr. Langford has scribbled altogether in Apollo's spite; but verse is now so common an accomplishment that a man may write in a style which would have made him a name and secured him a rather prominent place in the collections of the poets a century ago, and yet find himself utterly neglected in these days, when nothing short of the most original genius, or performances the most extraordinary and unprecedented, can attract permanent attention. A man is not now the lion of a party on such easy terms as in days of yore. A volume of glib verses or an agreeable continental or Oriental tour, then caused the author or the traveller to be regarded with interest and curiosity. A feat of literature or locomotion that would have seemed something admirable or marvellous in the olden time before us, is now looked upon with the most perfect indifference as a sheer common-place. But as "Indian celebrities" are rather "rare birds" even now, and Mr. Langford is really a man of no ordinary talent, though his writings are not quite so correct as they ought to be to satisfy this fastidious age, when almost every educated man can use his pen with some degree of neatness and propriety, we shall return in our next number to the consideration of his claims upon public notice as an Anglo-Indian author.

The book at the head of this notice was published so long ago that our criticism upon it will be a sort of "retrospective review;" but the work itself is utterly unknown in this country, and very little known in India. Though "printed and published" it is as good as manuscript, and the same may be said of an old critique from our own pen, of which we shall perhaps make some use before we have quite done with the subject.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JUSTICE TO INDIAN OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—As a friend and admirer of the Indian army, though not a member of it, I solicit your notice of the following case.

The Government of India forwarded some months ago to the Secretary of State for India in Council a supplementary list, prepared by the Commander-in-chief in India, and supported by Lord Canning, of officers recommended to be recorded for brevet promotion on attaining the rank of captain, for services performed during the mutinies. On its arrival, the Secretary of State for India in Council selected a very few names only (upon what grounds is not known) for special recommendation to his Royal Highness the General Commanding in Chief, and to these officers brevets were granted. Subsequently, when pressed by urgent appeals on behalf of those whose claims had not been recommended, and who were felt to be deserving of equal consideration with the others, the Secretary of State forwarded all the previously unselected cases to the Horse Guards, with a strong recommendation that brevets should be granted to these officers as well as to those first selected. The Horse Guards rejected the whole, not on account of inadequate merit (for there was no question as to the validity of the claims), but on account of the number of promotions already granted for similar services and the length of time which had elapsed since the mutinies.

Now, it is manifest that both these reasons were applicable, with equal force, to all the claims on the supplementary list—the first as well as the last recommended—for they were all included in that list, and all the services were performed during the same period; any distinction therefore of course bore hard upon officers of equal merit, and the objection on the score of time since the mutinies was not held to be valid in other cases, for after these claims were rejected, Victoria Crosses were granted to several officers for services performed during the mutinies, and therefore at the very same period as those for which brevets had been refused! It may further be observed that it was very long after the close of the Peninsular War that honours were granted to officers for services then performed.

All the claims on the supplementary list having had the same recommendation from the Commander-in-chief in India, the Viceroy, and the Secretary of State for India in Council, all were entitled to the same favourable consideration, since the merits were not disputed; and it is manifest that if the claims last submitted were entitled to recommendation at all they were so from the first. The brevets could not all have effect at the same time, as they would depend on the attainment of the rank of captain regimentally, which might occur at considerable intervals in the different cases, and the Secretary of State for India had intimated to the Horse Guards that there would be no further recommendations for brevet promotions on account of the mutinies.

Brevet promotions in India carry no increase of pay, and therefore cause no extra expense to the State.

The important services thus sought to be rewarded by an inexpensive honour were performed at a most critical period of the British power in India, and in some instances by officers in command of native troops, whose fidelity, sorely tried, resisted all temptation under their guidance.

Surely the marriage of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales would seem to be a very fitting occasion for a graceful acknowledgment of services brought to notice by the highest authorities in India, through the strictest course of official recommendation, and for an act of simple justice to an army which has many grounds of complaint for the treatment it has received since the mutinies; and it is hoped that H.R.H. the Field Marshal Commanding in Chief will avail himself of it, to do honour to the brave but friendless defenders of India.—Your obedient servant, Civis.
28th Feb., 1863.

[We cheerfully give insertion to this letter, and should rejoice to find the writer's object attained, though we can hardly venture to look for a consummation so devoutly to be wished. It would be impossible for our country and government to honour too highly the brave Englishmen who saved India to us, and so raised the glory of England at the most critical juncture in the history of our connection with the East.—Ed.]

NEW ROUTE TO INDIA.

It has at length been decided to take the first steps towards the realisation of a project the feasibility of which in the abstract has long been a moot point among engineers. Since the time that Lieut. Waghorn first elaborated, by his own energy and perseverance, the present overland route to India, Marseilles has enjoyed a practical monopoly of the passenger traffic. From time to time a spasmodic effort has been made upon the part of the Austrian Government to divert a portion of the carrying trade of the French lines to its own railway system, terminating, as it does, at the port of Trieste, the improvement and aggrandisement of which has always been a primary object with Austrian statesmen. The tangible results, however, have been hitherto woefully out of proportion to the pains which have been taken. With the exception of a few enterprising civilians who have contrived to accomplish the "grand tour" en route to some distant station of our Eastern empire, the steamers of the Austrian Lloyd's have carried but an infinitesimal proportion of the stream of human life which is ever surging to and fro between Alexandria and London. All who have endeavoured to shorten their sea voyage as much as possible have been in the habit of selecting Marseilles, and thus traversing the whole of France, from the English Channel to the Mediterranean, on their way to join the vessels of the Peninsular and Oriental Company at Malta. Nor has their number been few, in spite of the incessant changes rendered necessary by the intervention of two separate sea passages, and of at least three different railroads, between England and this the first stage of their long journey. Two routes, and two alone, have been supposed to be before the traveller whose ultimate destination has been Hindostan; and while his mountains of luggage have ordinarily been forwarded via Southampton, he himself is usually found to have been booked via Marseilles.

Such being the case, we may conceive the shock which has been occasioned to a whole host of vested interests by the news that a competing route is likely before long to appeal for support to the British public. Since the completion of the network of railways which connect Turin with Susa and Alessandria, and the latter city with Bologna, a direct line of railway has been opened from the foot of the Alps to the comparatively deserted port of Ancona, upon the Adriatic. Upon the other side of the Alps again, the communications are perfect with Geneva and Paris as far as Lanslebourg, the well-known Alpine village, where the ordinary pace of the diligence was in former times exchanged for a crawl at the tail of a whole cavalcade of horses and mules, and where, in the depth of winter, sledges have still not unfrequently to be brought into requisition. It is now ascertained beyond a doubt that the passage from Ancona to Alessandria can be made in some twenty-four hours less time than that from Marseilles to the same place, besides avoiding the change of vessels at Malta. To the substitution of Ancona for Marseilles two obstacles at present exist, the one natural, the other artificial. The Mont Cenis, in its present state, acts as an effectual bar to any through route to India passing over it, while the directors of the different French railroads are certain to take effectual precautions against the upspringing of any unhealthy competition from this quarter. The first objection will, it is anticipated, be removed when the tunnel is finally completed, which will some day physically unite the districts of Savoy and Piedmont, which are now politically severed. This, however, must be, under any circumstances, a work of time, extending over five or six years more at least, while the possibility of its being successfully accomplished at all remains at present an engineering problem which yet awaits solution. Meanwhile, it has been suggested that the route might be kept open, for all practical purposes, were a tramway constructed upon the surface of the existing roads, along which carriages might be dragged upwards and lowered downwards by powerful fixed engines placed at stated intervals. By a slight divergence from the present route, the perilous, and, for steam power, impracticable zigzags of the Italian side would be avoided, and the old line of road, which was deserted some years back on account of the frequency of avalanches in its vicinity, resumed. Any danger from these would be effectually guarded against by the construction of covered galleries, similar to those which already exist on a smaller scale upon Simplon, and upon the other Alpine passes. English capitalists have lately examined all the details of the scheme, and are so convinced of its feasibility, that, should the requisite permission for its construction be obtained, there seems likely to be no dearth of the sinews of war. A single summer would, it is considered, be sufficient to complete the undertaking, and to supply in a rough and rude, but still in a sufficiently practical mode, the only link which is now wanting to join the extensive and ever-increasing railway systems of France and Italy.

Such are the outlines of a scheme which has already successfully surmounted all the perils of infancy, which has obtained the goodwill of the Cabinet of Turin, and which now awaits only the sanction of the French Government to be commenced. We sincerely trust that the undertaking may be allowed to stand or fall by its own merits, and that its progress will not be arrested by any national jealousies, which would be as unworthy as they must in the end be futile. It may be that the French engineers, as a body, have little confidence in the prospects of the monster tunnel, and attach, in consequence, but little importance to the efforts of any competition which depends upon its completion. But they can hardly be ignorant that other projects are on the tapis, and that half a century hence, if not at a much earlier period, the Alps will probably be traversed by as many lines of railway as Hyde-park itself, should all the metropolitan Bills of the present session pass into law. If a veto be placed upon the efforts of science in Savoy, the scene of action will only be changed to the Valais. There are schemes already on foot for crossing the St. Bernard, the Simplon, and the St. Gothard, any one of which, if carried out, would sap the French railroad system to a far more serious extent than the route by the Mont Cenis. That the latter will in all probability prove a serious competitor for the monopoly which Marseilles has hitherto enjoyed we do not for a moment deny. Those, however, who know how to read aright the lessons of past experience are aware that few attempts have been attended with more uniform failure than those, the object of which is to divert the flow of commerce or of traffic from its natural channels, and to force it into an artificial groove. Marseilles has an enormous number of natural advantages which, if well used, may possibly enable it to maintain its present position. If not, and if, as we suspect, the shorter sea route from Ancona will ultimately carry the day, it is worse than useless to attempt to stifle the enterprise in its cradle.—Morning Post, March 3.

BANQUET TO REAR-ADMIRAL SIR JAMES HOPE, K.C.B.

A banquet was given by the United Service Club, on Wednesday evening last, in their clubhouse in Pall-mall, to Rear-Admiral Sir James Hope, K.C.B., late commander-in-chief on the East India and China stations, on his return home from China, and in compliment to his eminent services while in that naval command. The banquet, which was of a sumptuous description, was served up in the coffee-room in a style of great splendour. Covers were laid for 124 persons. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, attended by Colonel Clifton, arrived early, and joined the company in the library. Viscount Palmerston did not reach the club till late, so that the dinner was not announced till a quarter past eight, when the members and friends descended to the banquetting-room.

The Duke of Cambridge presided, Admiral Sir James Hope on the right and Viscount Palmerston on the left, supporting his Royal Highness. The Duke of Somerset, First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir Harry Parker, Commander Douglas, R.N., Hon. Arthur F. Kinnaird, M.P., and Mr. Ashby, naval secretary to Sir James Hope, were visitors on the occasion. Major-general A. Anderson, Lieut.-general E. Gascoigne, Captain George S. Hands, R.N., Vice-Admiral R. H. Manners, Captain John Secombe, R.N., and Captain Sir W. S. Wiseman, R.N., discharged the duties of vice-presidents at the different tables. The club was largely represented by its members.

After dessert was commenced the Duke of Cambridge proposed "The Queen," followed by "His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and the Royal Family." His Royal Highness, after these loyal toasts, gave "The Navy and the Army," and other toasts. Admiral Sir James Hope, the Duke of Somerset, Lord Palmerston, &c., were among the speakers.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MEMORIAL OF THE BENGAL ENGINEERS.—The attention of all those persons who are interested in the history of the Indian mutiny, and more particularly the siege of Delhi, and the part taken in that heroic exploit by the Bengal Engineers, should be directed to the monument which is now exhibited in South Kensington Museum, before being sent to Calcutta, where it will occupy a conspicuous place in the cathedral. The memorial is the work of Baron Marchetti, and takes the form of a large ornamental tablet, comprising bronze representations in bas-relief of the Cashmere Gate and other scenes almost as memorable in connection with the events of that time. The upper portion of the slab contains the heads, also in bronze, of officers who fell during the mutiny, some at Delhi, others at Lucknow, and others as victims of Nana Sahib at Cawnpore. Amongst the names that have shed lustre on the corps are those of Salkeld, Fulton, Swynfen-Jervis, Monckton, Walker, Jones, Home, Innes, Tandy, the Frazers, Whiting, Anderson, and Brownlow. The likenesses are pronounced by all who knew the men themselves to be excellent, and the general design of the monument is worthy the reputation of the sculptor.

APPOINTMENT.—(India office, March 3.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint George Campbell, Esq., of the Bengal Civil Service, to be a Judge of the High Court at Calcutta.

ACCIDENT TO THE P. AND O. COMPANY'S STEAMER "NEMESIS."—A Point de Galle telegram, dated Feb. 18, states that the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Nemesis struck on a rock while coming into harbour. She, however, entered safely, although in a leaky condition.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for Rs. 60,00,000 (£600,000), in bills on India Stock, took place on Wednesday at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were:—To Calcutta, Rs. 34,60,000; to Bombay, Rs. 24,00,000; and to Madras, Rs. 1,40,000. The declared minimum price was as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 2s. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for about 140 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta, at 1s. 11½d., will receive about 63 per cent.; on Bombay, at 2s., about 26 per cent.; and all tenders above these prices in full; on Madras, at 2s., will receive in full.

COTTON IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.—The American cotton grown in Dharwar is now positively greater in quantity than the indigenous plant. Ten years ago there was more than seven times as much native as American cotton grown. Gradually its estimation has increased, till, in 1802, the American was nearly twenty-five per cent. more than the less valuable cotton of the country.

The Misses WINTERBOTTOM can give most unexceptionable references.

A WIDOW LADY, residing in the best and most healthy part of Notting-hill, RECEIVES a few YOUNG LADIES to Educate with her own Children, upon moderate terms. Parents residing abroad are assured that every endeavour will be made to promote the comfort and happiness of a home with the advantages of a School. From the proximity of Notting-hill to the West-end of London, the most accomplished professors of music, drawing, &c., can be engaged, when required, upon moderate terms.

Address Mrs. BLAIR LEIGHTON, Lansdowne-crescent, Notting-hill. References: Prof. FARADAY, D.C.L., &c., &c., Royal Institution of Great Britain, London; and Messrs. BOOSEY and SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street.

THE REV. E. A. CLAYDON PREPARES PUPILS for the Universities, for the Civil Service, and for the Competitive Examinations for Woolwich, Sandhurst, and the Line. References are permitted to EDGAR CORRIE, Esq., 26, Lombard-street, E.C.
Address 4, Church-terrace, Lee, S.E.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.

Address, "ALLY," care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

MILITARY EDUCATION.—The Rev. CHARLES J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wrangler, Cambridge, 1852), Rector of Perrivale (population 32), begs to inform his Friends that he has REMOVED from the Finchley-road to his Residence (built expressly for him), CASTLEBAR-COURT, EALING, W., where he receives both Senior and Junior Pupils to prepare for the Army, Military Colleges, and the Civil Service.

MILITARY AND NAVAL EDUCATION.—A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R. YOUNG, formerly of Belton College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute. Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

A LADY can strongly recommend an EUROPEAN FEMALE SERVANT, who is accustomed to the care of children, and who wishes to RETURN to Calcutta about the end of April, or in May.
For further particulars apply to C. W. H., care of Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co., 65, Cornhill, London, E.C.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

NEW GENERAL ATLAS.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY.

THE ROYAL ATLAS OF MODERN GEOGRAPHY.

In a Series of entirely Original and Authentic Maps.

By A. KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., Author of the "Physical Atlas," &c.

With a Complete Index of easy reference to each Map, comprising nearly 150,000 Places contained in this Atlas.
Imperial Folio, half-bound in Russia or Morocco, £5. 15s. 6d.

"No one can look through Mr. Keith Johnston's new Atlas without seeing that it is the best which has ever been published in this country."—The Times.

"Of the many noble atlases prepared by Mr. Johnston, and published by Messrs. Blackwood and Sons, this Royal Atlas will be the most useful to the public, and will deserve to be the most popular."—Athenaeum.

"We know no series of maps which we can more warmly recommend. The accuracy, wherever we have attempted to put it to the test, is really astonishing."—Saturday Review.

"The culmination of all attempts to depict the face of the world appears in the Royal Atlas, than which it is impossible to conceive anything more perfect."—Morning Herald.

"This is, beyond question, the most splendid and luxurious, as well as the most useful and complete, of all existing atlases."—Guardian.

"There has not, we believe, been produced for general public use a body of maps equal in beauty and completeness to the Royal Atlas just issued by Mr. A. K. Johnston."—Examiner.

"An almost daily reference to, and comparison of it with others, since the publication of the first part some two years ago until now, enables us to say, without the slightest hesitation, that this is by far the most complete and authentic atlas that has yet been issued."—Scotsman.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAFTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the product of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nafel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

THE BEAUTIES of the EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patrons, that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARATIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes—'a simple of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugénie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty.—Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

NOTHING IMPOSSIBLE.—The greatest and most useful invention of the day, AQUA AMARELLA.—Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL and Co., Three King-court, Lombard-street, Pertinners to her Majesty, respectfully offer to the public this truly marvellous fluid, which gradually restores the human hair to its pristine hue—no matter at what age. The Aqua Amarella has none of the properties of dyes; it, on the contrary, is beneficial to the system, and when the hair is once restored one application per month will keep it in perfect colour. Price one guinea per bottle.

NO MORE ERUPTIONS on the SKIN.—

MOLLIARD'S PERFUMED TOILET SULPHUR SOAP and CREAM, entirely free from any unpleasant smell, and are sovereign remedies against fever, local or chronic cutaneous eruptions, rheumatism, pains in the joints, &c. The Cream possesses all the properties of the renowned Barge Waters for baths. Recommended by the most eminent physicians. Prospectus and testimonials sent on application.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence: this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Sedlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Sedlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinidine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-MILE, RUCIARB, and GINGER PILLS.

This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, ruciarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient, for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

EXPERIENCE BEFORE AUTHORITY.—For nearly the third of a century have these remedies stood in the foremost rank for overcoming ulcers, sore swellings, rashes, and all descriptions of skin diseases. At first the faculty denounced these medicaments, but the experience of sufferers soon overthrew all interested opposition. Those whom Holloway's medicines had cured told other invalids the benefit they had derived from their use; these in their turn tried them, found equally satisfactory results, and thus are these admirable curatives used and prized throughout the habitable globe. The Ointment has always been applied with the most marked success on bad legs, erysipelas, varicose veins, swelled ankles, and numberless other infirmities by which thousands around us are sorely oppressed.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 25th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE have only four days later news by this mail from Calcutta, and the only event of much interest that we have now to record is the departure of the Governor-General for the North-Western Provinces. His lordship quitted Calcutta on the morning of the 5th of February, and a Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary notifies that Major-General Sir Robert Napier, K.C.B., took his seat that day as President of the Council of the Governor-General, in the absence of his Excellency, who, it is expected, will be nearly two years away from the Presidency. Sir Robert also assumed the office of Deputy-Governor of the Fort and Garrison of Fort William. The Lieutenant-governor of Bengal joined the vice regal party at Dinapore, and proceeded with it to Benares, in order to be present at a grand durbar and a grand dinner. His Honour was expected to return to Calcutta by the 15th of February.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, with that love of labour which is so characteristic of his nature, is doing the work of a dozen ordinary men, so that people almost wonder how he finds time to recruit himself with food and sleep. He is in a state of almost perpetual motion, mind and body. Never was public duty a more perfect labour of love with any man than it is with Sir Charles Trevelyan, even in the exhausting climate of Bengal. His own excitement is contagious, and not only puts all officials in contact with him on their mettle, but causes the public to speculate perpetually about his intentions. The general report is that he will abolish the income-tax at all risks, though he is yet very anxious to surprise the world with his budget in April next, and greatly to surpass his predecessor in his financial triumphs. The revenue from opium alone is expected to be nearly one million sterling above Mr. Laing's estimate. In eleven months it shows an excess of £730,000. Whether the income-tax will really be abolished is not yet positively known, but it is certain that Sir Charles is contemplating that measure, and has called a committee of the Legislative Council to take the subject into consideration. Some people think that the million and a quarter sterling which the tax now yields cannot possibly be spared.

A report had been prevalent for some days before the mail left to the effect that Government intended to pay off a portion of the Four per Cent. Loan, but there was no authentic intelligence upon the subject.

An Act to give effect to the commercial treaty with Burmah passed into law on the 29th of January.

Staff officers of the Royal Artillery in India will draw staff salaries according to a scale which will be found in Calcutta General Orders.

New rules for the supply of rum to regiments and detachments proceeding up or down the country have been issued from the Commander-in-Chief's office, Head Quarters, Camp Lucknow, the object of these rules being apparently to ensure regularity of rations, and to prevent adulteration and surreptitious traffic in the liquor.

The spirit of revolt in the North-East is so far from being suppressed that it appears to be spreading rather seriously, to the vexation and perplexity of the Government. It has been found necessary to organise a better system of locomotion for the troops and the materials of war. The coolies employed had absconded in large bodies.

The proposal of the Bengal Government that the united head-quarters staff for the several presidencies should be in accordance with the notification, as given in our current official gazette, has met with the approval of the Secretary of State.

In the Imperial Legislative Council there had been an animated debate on the question of coolie emigration, and some members protested warmly and feelingly on the bad policy and inhumanity of shipping these Indian labourers for the colonies, especially as it was now so evident that we wanted them for public works in India, and every coolie emigrant is a loss to the country. Sir Charles Trevelyan thought that those coolies who returned to India came back with more intelligence, and a spirit of self-dependence, and more active habits; but it was also shown that they became more dissipated and vicious.

It has been determined that commissions on the veteran establishment to warrant officers shall be discontinued, and that honorary commissions for the future be granted in their place. Commissions of this kind will also be granted, in special cases, to non-commissioned officers employed on detached civil or military duty in India, who are eminently distinguished by long and faithful service. It is to be understood that commissions of this nature will not carry pay, or increase of pay, on attaining advanced rank. The remuneration of the individuals must be dependent on their position in the department or post in which they may be serving.

The formation of a volunteer rifle corps in the city of Calcutta has been sanctioned, and the appointments consequent thereon gazetted.

The Punjab Government has at last published the new rules for the sale of waste lands. They are said to be, in all essential respects, similar to those of Bengal. The upset price is to be Rs. 2-8 an acre.

The Calcutta and South-Eastern Railway is now complete, from its capital to the new port and town of Canning, on the Mutlah.

The new Government House at Allahabad, it is said, will not cost the State more than £160,000. Captain Peile is the appointed engineer. All estimates are more or less flattering in point of economy, and we dare say that the real cost of the edifice will in the end be nearly doubled.

Dr. Forbes's valuable report on the cotton gin factory of Dharwar, in the south of Bombay, for the half-year ending in January last, is now published. India, he says, must produce a staple equal to that of America if the Indian trade is to be secured against reactions and the effects of a bad repute. The local legislature is anxiously engaged in devising the best means of putting a stop to those adulterations of even the best indigenous cotton, which have caused all purchasers in England to mistrust the Indian trader. It is said that at Surat the sellers do not adulterate the cotton, but after shipment the boatmen remove a certain quantity from the bale and fill up the hollow space with water as a make-weight. It is proposed to punish by a fine not exceeding Rs. 1,000, or twelve months' imprisonment, or both, every well proved case of fraud and adulteration. Dr. Forbes thinks that about 300,000 bales of cotton will be ready to pour through the new harbour at Sedashegur as soon as it is ready.

Colonel Phayre has returned from Mandalay with the ratified treaty with the King of Burmah. A wealthy British merchant has already sent two steamers to ply on the Irrawaddy.

The Indian papers are still speculating about the possibility of Sir Hugh Rose's recall, but their speculations are a mere beating of the air. The question has been settled long ago that he will be continued in his command.

It appears that the forging of false stamps is carried on to a very serious extent in Madras. Several natives have been charged with this offence, and are now on their trial.

Colonel Ouchterlony has proposed to the Madras Government the laying down of a tramway from Coimbatore to Ootacamund. Sir William Denison gives his personal patronage to the project, but it is to be carried out by a private company.

The Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta, acting under the sanction of Government, have advertised for loans on debentures to the extent of eight lakhs of rupees, with a view to carrying out the proposed sewerage and draining of the city.

The Bombay and Baroda Railway is now completed to its northern terminus, Ahmedabad.

Sir William Mansfield, on his visit to Rajpootana, is to inspect the high hill of Jairaj, and to decide whether it is suitable for a sanatorium.

Dr. W. B. Beaton, of the Bengal medical establishment, has been appointed personal surgeon to his Excellency the Viceroy.

Orders of the Government of India promulgated from the Civil Pay Office of Fort St. George, dated Feb. 11, 1863, announce that the allowances of medical officers in civil employ will now be regulated in strict accordance with certain rules made applicable to two classes of medical officers—namely, those attached to civil stations of political agencies, and medical officers attached to public institutions, such as the Medical College, and to other civil staff appointments. The details will be found in another column.

THE BOMBAY MAIL.

SUEZ, March 13, 6 P.M.

The P. and O. Company's steamer, with the Bombay mail of 28th February, has arrived here.

The Belar sailed from Bombay on 18th February, and subsequently left Point de Galle for Australia with the London mails of 20th to 26th January.

The Nemesis (which met with an accident off Ceylon while bringing the last homeward Calcutta mail; being unable to dock at the latter port, she left for Calcutta on 22nd February, subsequently transferred her mails, passengers, &c., to the steamer Bombay) had arrived at Bombay not leaking much, damage apparently not serious.

ALEXANDRIA, March 14.

The Messilia and Delta sailed hence at day-break with the above mail.

The former may be expected at Marseilles about the 20th, the latter at Southampton about the 27th inst.

The Salsette brought the mail to Suez, arriving there on the 12th inst.

THE BRIDAL BOUQUET HOLDER.—The holder of Princess Alexandra's wedding bouquet was presented to her Royal Highness by the Maharajah Duleep Singh. This princely gift was manufactured by Messrs. London and Ryder, of New Bond-street, and the upper part receiving the flowers, which was carved out of rock crystal, has taken the lapidary some months to execute. It is trumpet-shaped, the crystal being inlaid with large emeralds and diamonds, relieved with pink coral and Oriental pearls. The shaft contains four plumes of feathers, composed of brilliants, and under each the letter A in rubies also four times repeated. A crystal ball set with rubies terminates this shaft or handle, and, by an ingenious piece of mechanism, is made to fly up, and releasing the four sides, forms four supports to stand upon the table. Around the centre is a ring arranged as the Princess's coronet, to which is attached a chain of large pearls and gold, having a hoop of pearls to wear on the finger; the only allusion to the donor being a small star of India in the ornamentation.

THE NEW CAPITAL OF THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

So long ago as April, 1858, Lord Canning decided that Allahabad should be the capital of the North-Western Provinces instead of Agra, and Colonel Strachey drew up plans for the new station, which were substantially adopted. But financial difficulties intervened, and only on the 29th November last did the Secretary of State in Council sanction the expenditure. Excluding Government House, the construction of which is to be provided for by a separate estimate, the erection of "substantial, commodious, and handsome buildings" for all the civil offices, in easy communication with each other and with Government House, is not to cost more than £160,000. The work will be entrusted to Captain Peile, executive engineer. The sum is small for the capital of thirty millions of people, and will doubtless be exceeded.

Unlike itself, the Punjab Government has only now published the new rules for the sale of waste lands. They are in almost all essential points similar to those of Bengal. The area of each grant is limited "ordinarily" to 3,000 acres, but persons may apply for two or more lots of this size. The upset price at auction will be Rs. 2-8 an acre. Grantees must contribute on the same terms as other landholders for the construction and repair of high roads, and will, like them, be responsible for the police and conservancy of their lots, and for all general cesses imposed upon landholders. We regret that this condition was not, with equal fullness, so as to include the educational cess, insisted on in the North-Western Provinces. The sixth and tenth clauses of the title-deed may be used oppressively, if they be not better defined. The sixth declares that "wherever any persons have been accustomed to use or consume the spontaneous products of the soil, the grantee shall not interfere with them so long as they do not trespass upon, or otherwise injure, the cultivated portion of the land." To prevent the misunderstandings which are sure to arise, Government should provide for the commutation of these rights to spontaneous produce, as Sir R. Montgomery has done in Kangra. The 10th clause gives the State power to assume the control of all streams running through estates, in which Government or other proprietors possess prescriptive rights, and to distribute the waters as it sees fit. The clause is too sweeping, and may keep back applicants, unless such streams are carefully described in the advertisement of the sale, and in the title deeds after purchase. The clause about claims of third parties, for which the State, as seller, should be responsible, and which, in the case of the Central and North-Western Provinces, prevents a Parliamentary title, finds no place in the Punjab rules which sell the land "in full proprietary right."—Friend of India.

THE CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE.

More than a month after the mutiny of the Bengalee Class of the Calcutta Medical College we hear that the authorities have thought proper to call on the students to submit their grievances for the consideration and orders of the College Council. This proceeding, at so late a period of the day, seems certainly injudicious, especially after the sample of the complaints in question which have appeared in the public press. One ambitious student, who complained of being favoured with a few harsh words on the occasion of administering the wrong medicine, reading a prescription incorrectly, and bandaging a patient improperly, was, even on his own showing, proved to be hopelessly in the wrong; but within one day from the publication of his letter even these frivolous charges were followed by the unqualified contradiction of the Principal of the institution. Even then, however, we had a word to say in favour of these misguided youths, provided they promptly acknowledged their error and petitioned to be re-admitted; and it was only after ascertaining what the complaints really were, not of the students against the professors, but of the professors against the students, and on learning, moreover, that these hopeful young mutineers, instead of submitting, were doing their very best to induce the military class at the college to join them, that we felt ourselves bound to publish the actual condition of affairs, and to urge the adoption of such measures as would preclude the possibility of future mutiny, either during a collegiate career, or at any subsequent time.

However, we are loth to be hard upon young men so little accustomed to rough it as the young Bengalees; and, provided the ringleaders are rigidly excluded, we should not so much object to seeing the more inexperienced, who had probably been led away by their elders, being re-admitted into the institution. But to call on the students to submit their grievances whilst they are in a state of mutiny is not only destructive to the efficiency and discipline of the college, but is calculated to inflict a lasting injury upon the young men themselves. An insubordinate subordinate is always a curse, but in the practice of medicine he is a curse alike to the patient he is called upon to attend, and to the superior he is bound to obey. Because the Bengalee students have not been allowed to stay away at their pleasure, make careless blunders without rebuke, and appropriate the college medicines to their own use in a fashion which a cruel, domineering, insolent magistrate has chosen to denominate felony and to punish accordingly, they have all thought proper to combine, and to do their utmost to induce others to combine, to compel the college authorities to show them a little more respect, forsooth, and kindness; and then for the authorities "that should be," after the lapse of a month from the mutiny, to call for a return of grievances imagined, invented, or otherwise, we cannot but feel to be so absurd that the students themselves must at once jump to the conclusion that the victory is more than half won—that further submission is unnecessary, and future discipline impossible.

Against this proceeding we beg to utter our loudest protest, though we are not unwilling to utilise the occurrence. The complaints, judging from those we have received, are not only vain and frivolous, but sheer inventions, prompted by feeble hearts and existing only in weak minds desirous of securing their end much in the same way that the sepoys of 1857 endeavoured to secure theirs. The submission of such complaints, therefore, can only be a mere matter of form; and we trust to see a proper order passed upon them accordingly. But should it result in the re-admission of any, more or less, such re-admission should only be granted on the engagement of every student either to obey the orders of Government for a certain number of years, or to repay to Government the expenses of his education at the college. At present a native doctor can leave any station that displeases him, or refuse to go to any station he is ordered, just at his own will and pleasure—a discretionary power which Government dare not entrust to its own European subordinates, and consequently cannot, without great detriment to the public service, leave in the hands of the Bengalees; to say nothing of the danger to which servants of Government in the hour of sickness and peril might be thereby exposed. Without some such engagement, then, the re-admission of any number of the mutinous Bengalee class will not only prove fatal to the Medical College, but ruinous in every way to the professional efficiency and moral and mental training of the students themselves.—Englishman, Jan. 27.

CONTRACTS WITHOUT ADVANCES.

The productiveness of the Punjab is acknowledged by every one, but the full extent of its material resources is still far from being known. Long has it established its claim to be called the granary of India. Long has it been the salt emporium of the North-West and the repository whence all the world receives the famed fabrics of Cashmere. The day may come when it will have fabrics of its own far more useful though less costly than these. Silk bids fair to be naturalised in the province, and we now learn that the cultivation of flax has been commenced with a measure of success surpassing the most sanguine expectations. Cotton, too, of excellent quality may be raised in some parts. The iron found in the hills has been proved to stand as great a strain as the best English or Swedish iron. The tea grown in Kangra, and other hill regions, is more delicate in flavour than any known kind; and could a steady market be found for the cheaper qualities among the natives of this country there would be no limit to its production. Steps have been taken for the introduction of the Chincona into the Kangra valley, where it will probably succeed as well as it has done in Southern India. The Chinese tallow-tree has been successfully reared in Dehra Doon, and will soon be tried elsewhere. That enterprises of this kind meet with so much success in the Punjab is largely due to the encouragement afforded to them by the local Government, and the interest taken in them by officials in all parts of the province. No sooner is a new idea started than it is warmly taken up in every direction, and failure is rendered almost impossible.

Of all the products which have been called into existence by private enterprise, aided by a wise and liberal administration, perhaps none is more important than flax. In days of old, flax was abundantly produced in England, and the Times recently drew attention to the causes of its disappearance, and the necessity that at present exists for a larger supply. The cultivation was abandoned because in the manner it was carried on it was found to be unprofitable. The supply was thenceforward obtained from countries where it could be produced in large quantities and at small cost. Some years ago samples of flax and hemp from the Punjab were sent to Dundee, and so much approved of that the manufacturers there offered to take any quantity at a most remunerative rate. The flax now grown in the province is of a superior kind to that generally used in Dundee, and finds its most suitable market in Belfast. Between two and three years ago a company was formed in that city, for the purpose of growing flax in India and importing it on its own account. It commenced operations in Sealkote, and two consignments have already been sent home by the agent of that place. Some of the fibre was valued at £100 a ton—a most unprecedented price. The result of the experiment has been so satisfactory that there is every prospect of this valuable product being extensively cultivated in the Punjab in the course of time.

The system at present followed in Sealkote is so simple and efficacious that it serves as a model to all who wish to apply capital to this country and to deal direct with the natives. There are about 600 acres under flax cultivation, almost all of which is in the Sealkote district. The land belongs to natives, and the crop is grown by them just as their own crops are. The agent and the grower enter into a simple contract, in which the former binds himself to give seed for a certain number of acres, and to receive the flax at the rate of three maunds for one rupee, and seed at five rupees a maund, deducting the seed advanced. The grower engages to cultivate a certain extent of ground, to give it sufficient manure and water, to take instructions from the agent, or any one he may appoint, in the treatment of the crop, and to deliver the flax at the above rate. This is found to be a fair and efficient arrangement for both parties. It is to be noticed, in the first place, that no money advances are given. We believe the agent did at first make advances to the cultivators, but he soon relinquished the practice, and has never had any trouble since. No contract has ever been broken. The natives are glad to enter into them, and fresh applications are constantly received. The profit to the ryot per acre is just about double what he gets from wheat. As the flax is sown in October, and gathered in March, he may use the land for other purposes during the rest of the year. After delivering the flax in its natural state, he has nothing more to do with it. The agent then has it steeped, or "retted," as it is called, dried, cleaned, scouted, and put through all the necessary processes in his own factory with the aid of paid coolies. The machinery used is, as yet, very simple, but a new factory has been erected, and improved machinery will soon be set up, which will render the process much easier and more efficacious.

At the last meeting of the Agri-Horticultural Society of the Punjab samples of the Sealkote flax were reported upon, and compared with a sample that had been brought from Belfast, and another from Leeds, and were found superior to them both. We have seen specimens of the flax in question. There are two qualities, the finer of which seems to be as fine as flax can possibly be. There is, therefore, no doubt that this important article of commerce can be produced in India, and of the very best quality. It is equally certain that capitalists can get the natives to grow it, without advances, and without trouble of any kind if they only set to work in the right way. A contract of some kind there must be, and nothing we have said would render a contract law unnecessary. If cases of default are rare, so much the better, and they will be rendered still rarer by the existence of a preventive law. In the present dearth of cotton, linen is in great demand, and it is possible that many of the Manchester cotton mills will be changed into linen mills, which could be done without very much alteration of the machinery. India's opportunity in the case of flax would be scarcely less precious than that which she has at this moment before her in the case of cotton. The agent of this flax company assures us that he could grow cotton on the same simple system as flax if he had any desire to do so. All operations of this kind are based on the great doctrine of supply and demand. But the utilitarian tendency contained in this must ever be counterbalanced by that desire to do what is just and honourable which should regulate all our transactions. We must warn our readers, however, of this fact, that the system of contracts without advances succeeds in the Punjab, because the local officials encourage it.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PRESIDENCY APPOINTMENTS.—An order, or something equivalent to one, has recently been made, and been already acted upon in, at least, one instance, to the effect that in future all military appointments in each presidency shall, as a general rule, and unless special reasons can be shown, be conferred upon officers belonging to the presidency in which a vacancy may occur. This rule is but just and fair as regards all parties concerned, and we hope to see it strictly carried out. There has always been a strong tendency among the officers of the Madras and Bombay armies to leave their own presidencies and get military employment in the Bengal army; and this ambition, which arose from a motive highly honourable to those officers—the desire to see service in our frequently recurring wars in Northern India—could, in former times, be to a certain extent gratified, without much prejudice to the military career or prospects of the officers of the Bengal army, who were then in full employ, and cared little for the intrusion of a comparatively few interlopers on their rightful domain. Since the mutiny and the annihilation of the old Bengal army, the case has, however, altered very much indeed, and the Bengal officers, of whom such a large number are out of employ, have seen with a natural jealousy numbers of Madras and Bombay officers inducted here, and placed in desirable appointments, which they look upon as theirs by every principle of right and justice. The home authorities have also viewed the matter in the same rational light; and desirous, no doubt, of employing the Bengal officers where eligible, as much as possible, and so diminishing the wide discontent which prevails, have sent out the order in question, which the Governor-general has, in this instance, carried into effect. This order will not affect present incumbents from the other Presidencies, who will be allowed to retain their commands and other appointments in Bengal; but for the future the rule in these matters will be, Bengal and its military appointments for the Bengal officers, and the leaves and fishes of Madras and Bombay for the officers of those Presidencies. It is always, to say the least, unadvisable to remove military officers from their own Presidencies, and employ them in the others. It is now a positive injustice to the Bengal officers to introduce outsiders from Madras or Bombay, and place them in appointments which the former would be glad to get, and the duties of which they can perform efficiently and well. We only wonder that this order was not sooner issued from home; but, if fairly acted up to now, it will considerably ameliorate the condition of the Bengal officers by slow degrees.—Englishman, Feb. 2.

ALLAHABAD, Jan. 26.—The great annual mela held at the conflux of the Rivers Ganges and Jumna, near to our fort, has attracted hundreds of thousands of natives from some of the most distant parts of India. It is now over, and those who attended it are rapidly returning home. Several trains densely packed with natives leave every day, and only a few stragglers remain. It was a sight which would have amply repaid a journey from Calcutta now that Dak Gharries are superseded. The view is a very startling one as seen from the heights of the Fort. An immense plateau, formed by the low state of the rivers, and stretching almost as far as the eye can reach, is thronged with countless natives, who have created temporary but picturesque huts and bazaars on each side of one long street or avenue. There is nothing of native manufacture which cannot be purchased here in abundance, while the hundred groups of faqueers and other devout sects, form the "filling in" of a picture I have never seen surpassed in any part of the world. Some of the wretched creatures, who in their blind devotion have thought it necessary to distort their limbs in every possible manner, had a painfully instructive effect. The wonderful sight at our old English fairs of the horse whose tail was where its head ought to be, would have waned into insignificance here. One fanatic in the most advanced state of jaundice was seated in a small box with his legs twisted fantastically round his chest, and the soles of his feet resting on his shoulder. A peculiar species of sacred bull formed a considerable attraction. Besides the usual amount of legs allotted to such quadrupeds, it possessed an extra one, equal in size to the others, and which grew out out of the hump upon its shoulders. At first I thought it might be an imposition; but upon examining it I found it to be genuine. This animal was covered with shells and bells, and received the profoundest homage from the crowd. The now narrow Ganges glided quietly by, its surface glistening in the sun. Where it met and joined the Jumna, there were gaudy banners, bearing quaint devices, flapping in the silent breeze from the tops of lofty bamboos. A vast multitude of people congregated here for the purpose of bathing, and the sacred waters were covered with bright yellow flowers, which seem to hold a high importance in this eastern festival. The presence of some swinging boats served to remind one of the miniature fairs at home; but in all else the panorama was far different. It is, however, not to be wondered at that the filthy and negligent habits of half the natives brought on cholera, and for several days the fatal cases averaged sixty. Victims were found dead at the railway station. In one day seven corpses were removed. The scourge has happily confined itself to the district where it was engendered. Allahabad is now very full of visitors from Bengal, and the hotels have been thronged.

EXTENT OF INDIA'S ASSISTANCE TO THE PEKIN AUTHORITIES.—Somewhat exaggerated ideas seem to prevail in England as to the extent to which India has been assisting the Pekin authorities. We have sold for a fair price 4,000 muskets, which are now of obsolete pattern, with a due proportion of musket ammunition. The muskets of the 2nd Punjab Infantry and 5th B.N.I.

were also taken over on their departure from China for the use of Chinese troops. We are not aware that any volunteers have yet left India for the Anglo-Chinese force, notwithstanding the permission granted in the Calcutta Gazette some months ago. But as soon as Captain Osborn has really organised his force, we should not be surprised were several adventurers and some Indian officers to seek in China that excitement which India is not likely to offer them for many years. Captain Osborn has offered such favourable terms in the shape of pay, wound and death bounties and prize-money, that he has secured a fine body of short-service men-of-war's men, and to act with them he intends to raise levies of Chinese seamen. The Anglo-Chinese fleet is to be under the rules of H.M.'s Navy, except that discharge is substituted for corporal punishment.

ECCLIESIASTICAL CHANGES.—We have been informed that the Rev. Henry Hutton, M.A., Senior Presidency Chaplain and Senior Chaplain of the Old Church, intends shortly to retire from the service. The following changes will take place in the Ecclesiastical Establishment on the Rev. Mr. Hutton's retirement: The Rev. Arthur Brown Spry, M.A., at present Senior Chaplain of St. John's Church (old cathedral), becomes Senior Presidency Chaplain, on a salary of Rs. 1,201-3-3 per month, and the Rev. Mr. Garbett, attached to the Barrackpore Church, will be offered the Junior Presidency Chaplainship, of which the emoluments are Rs. 1,126-2 per month.

THE LATE MR. RICKETTS.—The native community of Calcutta lately subscribed for the portrait of Mr. Ricketts, who four years ago was a Member of Council, and in his reply to a farewell address from the natives declared, "Throughout my long experience the more I have trusted native officers, the more faithful they have been found." The portrait is hung in the hall of the British Indian Association, and represents the deceased gentleman in full length, with a paper bearing these words in his hands. Is the portrait intended to honour the memory of Mr. Ricketts, or the character of the Bengalees? An able officer, Mr. Ricketts' conceit and pure Bengal Civilianism prevented him from doing more good, and led him to do much evil. But for him and Sir J. P. Grant, Bengal might have had a field survey.

WIFE-BEATING.—A Mussulman, a Mooktear of the Calcutta Small Cause Court, was sentenced at the sessions to rigorous imprisonment for three years, for most barbarous treatment of his "nika" wife. On return from Court one day he was displeased with the soup prepared for him, because it had been burnt. After abusing his wife he deliberately took both her hands in his right, and with his left hand applied the lamp to her clothes, saying, "As you have burnt my soup, I shall burn you." In this position he held her till the fire reached her waist, by which time she was severely burnt on her left side, and in endeavouring to put out the flames she burnt her hands also. He was proved to have then taken and dashed her against the floor. Next to jealousy there is no more fruitful cause of wife-beating in India than badly prepared food.

FREEBOOTERS IN CENTRAL INDIA.—In no part of the empire is the prosperity of our own territory and subjects more intimately associated with the behaviour of our feudatory neighbours than in Central India. From the Chumbul to the Nerbudda our provinces are flanked by the dominions of powerful chieftains, and entangled with all the duchies, large and small, of Bundelcund. It is important, for the safety and peace of our subjects, that strong control should reign within their borders, as it is that good government should be maintained in our own possessions. The boundaries that till lately marked the sway of the Mahratta to the eastward of the Betwa, have been more clearly defined, and more conveniently arranged than heretofore; but though they have been substantially, and where the features of the country permitted, geographically marked out, there is no towering range of hills or unfordable torrent to act as a bar of defence on either side. The evil disposed to the west and to the east cross to and fro without check or hindrance; the murderer escapes from his pursuers, and the plunderer safely runs his pillage to harbour in the fastnesses and jungles of an alien State, where the ground retains no mark of the footprint, and the peasantry will afford no clue to the lair. Under circumstances such as these, it is needful that a strong preventive check should be held on the turbulent and disaffected, by means of a well armed, well disciplined, and courageous constabulary. They must be armed with a better weapon than the club or the match-lock, otherwise they will not be able to cope with superior numbers. They must be strictly disciplined or they will prove a greater source of terror to the peaceful cultivator than to the outlaw. And they must be brave and enduring, or they will be useless. Such a police was raised with the view of subduing rebellion in 1851, and under the term "constabulary" it still exists, and must for many years continue, to preserve peace in the wild fastnesses of Bundelcund. The detective element has been advantageously grafted on the seasoned and well disciplined military trunk, and they now form a constabulary which preserves peace in our towns, on our roads, and in our jungles. But the zeal and intelligence of the officers, and all the enterprise and courage of their men, avail nothing so long as these depredators find secure retreats in native States; retreats so convenient to our borders, that a few hours of darkness suffice for a foray on ground that they dare not approach by daylight. This is a subject that demands prompt and earnest consideration. The chiefs of Central India, and foremost of them all—Scindia, should be urged to commence a reform which the spirit of the age and of humanity demands. It cannot be delayed. Life and property must be made secure. Large gangs of dacoits cannot be allowed to invade our districts, to carry off wealthy captives for ransom, or to return laden with midnight spoil. Energetic measures have compelled these scoundrels to forsake their lairs within our own borders, and similar measures must be adopted by our feudal neighbours. The landholders, who shield them, should be coerced; the officials, who fear them, should be dispensed with; and some well-equipped, carefully-disciplined, daring men, should be let loose in parties of twenties over the jungles wherein they hide. Every forest pathway should be probed; every bivouac should be noted and marked down; and liberal rewards should be conceded for every success or capture. Until some such tactics as these are adopted, the Boondeela freebooters will have it all their own way in Central India.—Friend of India.

ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIESTS.—The Lahore Chronicle publishes a list of all the Roman Catholic priests who act as military chaplains in India, from which it appears that at least 80 per cent. are foreigners, chiefly French and Italian. Two are Jesuits. The Vicar Apostolic of Behar is Dr. Athanasius Hartmann, a German. In the Agra and Punjab Vicariat, there is Dr. Bedenic, a Swabian; his two immediate predecessors were Bishops Carli and Persico, both Italians. In Bombay, Dr. Steins, a Bavarian, is the Bishop; and in Burmah, Dr. Bigandet, an Italian. Each of these foreign priests receives, we believe, Rs. 400 per month from the Indian Government. The Irish priests are employed chiefly as teachers and missionaries in Bengal and Bombay.

THE DELHI BANK has declared a dividend at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, free of Income-tax, and has carried 2 per cent. to the credit of the reserve fund. The shareholders have done well in deciding that under any circumstances one per cent. shall always be credited to that fund. Mr. Parry, the able manager, has been presented with a bonus of Rs. 5,000, for his efforts in recovering further securities lost in the mutiny.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONERSHIPS.—It has been ruled by Government that all officers, civil or military, shall on first appointment to third class assistant commissionerships draw Rs. 400 a month, until they pass the higher standard of examination and are vested with full powers, after which they will receive Rs. 500 a month.

TRACTION ENGINES IN INDIA.—The quiet of Anarkullie was rather disturbed this evening by the arrival of one of Bourne's traction engines. It came at a very slow pace into the station, having five or six waggons in tow, and it was quite dark before it arrived at its destination. It took upwards of a month in accomplishing the distance between Mooltan and Lahore, having met with one or two mishaps on its journey. I trust it may prove a successful speculation; but from what I saw I am afraid it is too cumbersome an article to prove useful on our Punjab roads. It will be used between this place and Ferozepore, meeting the Oriental Inland Company's steamers and transporting the goods at once thence to Lahore, where the head office of the company is located.

INDIAN TELEGRAPHS.—The telegraph lines throughout India are to be thoroughly reconstructed. There is to be a double line between Bombay and Calcutta, and a new coast line from Galle to Bombay. Sir William O'Shaughnessy's lines were of a temporary make-shift character, all that he engaged to do having been to complete, any how, the lines between certain great towns, so that no matter whether well or ill-constructed, that is, temporarily or permanently, there should be a system of Indian telegraphs at work within a given time. We are now paying for this haste. The lines are in bad condition, and will have to be reconstructed in the best manner. The expenditure will be heavy, but it will be cheerfully borne. The great difficulty will be to get the material out from England as quickly and in as large quantity as is necessary. There is some material here to go on with, but much more is required. Wooden posts are to be done away with, "Hamilton's iron standards" being substituted instead. The Home Government would not give Colonel Douglas the particular kind of insulators he long ago applied for, but sent out, on the recommendation of the inventor, and as less expensive, some of Sir William O'Shaughnessy's. These have been fairly tried, and have failed; and now at home Colonel Stewart is the officer consulted. The transit of the standards from the coast to the interior will cost heavily—seven rupees each from Calcutta to Agra only! The work of reconstruction is now being proceeded with from Agra to the Punjab.

A PUNJAB SEMI-CHRISTIAN RAJAH.—Many of your readers may possibly be familiar with the name of the Rajah of Kuppootulha, a chief of some local renown on this side of India. He has been eulogised and lauded by a certain class to such an extent as to make him appear the very ne plus ultra of a liberal native nobleman. He attends church and religious meetings, is married to an Eurasian Christian lady, is a freemason, attends barra-khanas, and was lionised at the recent Conference, where he was pronounced a Christian whose example was worthy of imitation, and whose likeness forms the centre of a photograph of the most conspicuous worthies whose shadows were deemed worthy of being perpetuated to future generations. This gentleman, as I before said, is married to a Christian lady, by whom he has one or two children, and who, having European nurses and other Christian attendants, it was thought were being brought up as Christians. But it is now publicly announced that the elder, a child between three and four years of age, is on the eve of being married by pundits and gooroots, whose law changeth not! Now, all I have to say in the matter is, that after all the fuss that has been made about this Rajah, and the way he has been held up as a paragon of all that is good, this public act of his is calculated to bring our religion into contempt. The Rajah is not, never was, and I doubt if he ever will become, a Christian in heart; he has certain ends in view, the accomplishment of which induce him to hover, as it were, on the brink of Christianity, but into which he will never really plunge. The Punjab has a Government, which is supposed to be favourable to Christianity, a fact well known to the Rajah, who, with the hereditary cunning of his race, doubtless thought he might be a gainer by becoming almost a Christian; hence his double conduct.

LAHORE, Jan. 17.—ADVANTAGES OF THE RAILWAYS.—I have been silent for some time past respecting railway doings here—not that anything has now particularly occurred to give occasion to my introducing the topic; but the fact of my having omitted for some time to make any reference to the subject, may induce you to suppose it was one that occupied no prominent place in Punjab history. Such is very far from being the fact, I assure you; its great importance is every day showing itself more and more. Already has trade of every kind received a stimulus therefrom to an extent almost impossible to conceive. The timber trade, among others, has increased a hundredfold; while the thousands of labouring classes who are to be seen repairing daily to, and returning from, works on different parts of the line in immense gangs, is a living instance of the benefits accruing to this large section of the community by the introduction of railways. The bazaar and villages are now completely denuded of the crowds of idlers who some time ago were to be found, at every hour of the day, hanging about in a naked, half-starved condition, plotting mischief. These people are now transformed into beings of quite a different kind; they are warmly clad in winter, well fed, and have a contented, happy appearance that contrasts very favourably with their previous condition. It is true that such a large demand for labourers of all kinds has materially and necessarily increased the rate of ordinary labour, and in many cases rendered it a matter of extreme difficulty for private individuals to obtain good mechanics under any circumstances, owing to the facility of getting constant employment, at high wages, on the railway. But this cannot be viewed otherwise than favourable, though it is productive of occasional hardship. However, not to become prosy, I will only add, as I may not revert to the subject again for some time, that not only is railway influence felt by the poor labourer and artificer, but by all, high and low, European and native. The incomplete portion of the Mooltan line is progressing rapidly, while the preliminary work of boring in the Beas and Sutlej rivers for the Delhi Railway is also being proceeded with. The two superior officers of the company, the agent and chief engineer, are now on a tour of inspection of the line towards Delhi, and, it is said, active steps will be taken to commence the works immediately. As far as I can judge, the Delhi line will, as a commercial speculation, prove the most remunerative of the two; it is very popular here with all, and I have been informed that no difficulty has been experienced in filling the share list. For a considerable period attention has been gradually directed to the very many imperfections the capital city of the Punjab presents as a great commercial emporium, till at length matters have forced themselves on the local authorities to such an extent as to make it apparent the time has fully arrived when vigorous action must be taken to remedy existing defects, if Lahore is to remain the first trading mart of the province. The influx of Europeans and people of all countries has been so great during the past two or three years, that the population has doubled itself; and if railways, canals, and works and schemes of every kind, such as have recently sprung up, only continue in the same ratio, the place must treble itself before another two years have passed over it. To those unacquainted with the locality it may, perhaps, be better were I to mention, that Lahore, commonly so called, consists of four distinct and distantly situated and by no means imposing stations. Ancient Lahore (the city) is inclosed by walls, and is entirely inhabited by natives of all kinds. Anarkullie, the seat of local Government, is a pleasant little village situated a short distance from the city, and occupied almost entirely by employes of Government. Meean Meer, the military cantonment, is six miles south of Anarkullie; while Noulukha, the railway terminus and future town, around which commerce ultimately is sure to cling, is nearly three miles from either of the other places referred to. These four stations embrace probably an area of some fifteen miles in circumference, and, as may well be supposed, their scattered and isolated condition is productive of considerable inconvenience to the ordinary public business of the place, and must prove fatal to its prosperity in a commercial point of view. To meet the present difficulty to a considerable extent, it is contemplated erecting a new Lahore, nearly midway between Anarkullie and the railway terminus, in such a position as not to render any great change requisite among the native portion of the community, while the distance of the new town to the military cantonment will be shortened by nearly one-half the distance. This change, though greatly needed, is not viewed by all classes here with favour; many householders, whose incomes are principally derived from rents, are, (and perhaps not unnaturally,) utterly opposed to the scheme, and can adduce innumerable reasons against the proposed plan. Others, too, who reside on their own estates in Anarkullie, do not look upon the change with any relish. But I, who don't own a single brick in Lahore, and can look at it in a cool, philosophical, impartial manner, consider the project not only an admirable but an indispensable one. It is manifestly impossible that Lahore should continue as it is: it must either advance or retrograde, and if the opportunity is now let slip, another town will step in and take her place, and all chance of rising again will be impossible.

POLITICAL OFFICERS AT NATIVE DURBARS.—It was of late a subject of discussion in the newspapers regarding political officers taking off their shoes when entering the durbars of native chiefs. The political agent at Rajpootana made the matter a subject of communication with several native chiefs of that place. We are now happy to learn that this rude practice has been abolished in the Rajpootana territories. The native chiefs have been pleased to waive the ceremony of the political agent taking off his shoes when visiting them.

MR. H. B. HARRINGTON.—We contradict, upon good authority, the statement that appeared in some of the local newspapers, that Mr. H. B. Harrington is to succeed Mr. Edmonstone as the Lieut.-Governor of the N. W. Provinces. Nothing, in fact, has definitely transpired as to who will obtain the high office, though, in well-informed circles, Mr. Muir is mentioned as the likeliest individual to be appointed. Both are eminently qualified for the post, and, whoever gets it, the destinies of the N. W. Provinces will be in able hands. We would not have it understood that the election alternates between the two gentlemen named.—Englishman.

SIR CHARLES WOOD has decided that the enforced retirement of civilians after thirty-five years' service does not apply to judges of the High Court of Judicature, who are to remain on the bench for the period specified in the rules laid down in the Gazette of the 16th July last, namely, seven years' actual service in that office. According to this ruling, Mr. H. T. Raikes, one of the judges appointed in July, 1862, who has already actually resided in the country for thirty-five years, might continue, if he saw fit, to serve on the bench till 1869, but we understand he has announced his intention of retiring on the pension of his rank on the expiration of his present six months' sick leave.—Lahore Chronicle, Jan. 28.

THE LINE OF RAILWAY TO AHMEDABAD is to be opened to-morrow, Jan. 20. The entire length is 185 miles. The accommodation at the Ahmedabad end will consist of tents, till the station (now in course of erection) is completed. This terminus, with its station, workshop, &c., when finished will present an imposing and busy appearance. A new company have started, called the Royal Gujarat Hotel Company, conducted by Jehangeer Brothers and Co., having for its purpose the laudable object of providing hotels at all the principal railway stations in Gujarat. On the opening of the line to Bombay the comfort of these hotels will be felt and appreciated by travellers proceeding from the presidency to Ahmedabad. The journey now necessitates the taking a stoak of creature comforts; and it is at a station, where one perhaps arrives as a stranger, that the want of an hotel is felt.

AMALGAMATION OF BRITISH AND INDIAN FORCES.—The general orders for the formation of the amalgamated general staff of the British and Indian forces, as finally sanctioned and sent out to this country in a military letter from the Secretary of State for India; and also the nominations to the different staff appointments in the Adjutant-general's and Quartermaster-general's Departments of the Bengal army, in accordance with the Secretary of State's directions, have lately been published. The new arrangements are judicious and efficient, for they dispose of the expensive and useless double machinery the day for which has legitimately passed away, while fully providing for the discharge of the duties of the two important departments concerned, and effecting a considerable pecuniary saving. We perceive that, in the nominations to the list of Assistant Quartermasters-general, Major D. Shute, hitherto at the head of the next grade, has been passed over, two officers junior to him in the department, and of course below him in the list—Captain Johnson and Major Roberts—having been promoted over his head, without any reason being assigned. There is also an innovation in the list of the nine Deputy-assistant Quartermasters-general which we cannot exactly understand, and which requires explanation. Hitherto these officers have been divided into three different classes or grades, with three different rates of staff-pay; whereas, in the amalgamated list, the whole nine officers are assimilated, and all classification is done away with. The proportion of officers of the Adjutant-general's and Quartermaster-general's departments assigned to army head-quarters is fair, and such as the exigencies of the service require; and, on the whole, we think the amalgamation and arrangements such as will work efficiently with a considerable saving to the public—two excellent aims to keep in view in these times.—Englishman, Feb. 8.

ANTICIPATED MILITARY REDUCTIONS.—It is not the Madras army alone that may now look out for reductions and retrenchments, that of Bengal should also be prepared for scratches of the pen and clippings of the shears. We mentioned lately that the native cavalry force of the Bengal army was certainly doomed to considerable diminution, and we would warn the infantry that they, too, will be passed in review by the financiers, and possibly curtailed of a portion of their strength and numbers. We viewed with satisfaction the considerable reduction of the native army which was wisely effected a few years ago, and we should gladly have seen the reduction carried much further at that time; but it is never too late to recommence the good work, and we should be willing spectators of a still continued economy in that direction. The country generally disarmed, and the new police system fully inaugurated and working, the native armies of the three presidencies are still larger than is necessary. If the native army could be considered a tower of strength in case of need, perhaps it might be as well to keep that tower at its present proportions; but this being a very doubtful point, and it being very easy to augment the native army whenever it may be desirable to do so, the present force is larger than is requisite for the safety and peace of the country, or good for the revenue. It is at all times easy to improvise a native army in India; and if it be objected that an army or a number of regiments thus suddenly raised will be deficient in military knowledge, discipline, and skilful use of their arms, it may, with truth, be answered that these deficiencies will only be comparative, leaving the advantage far on the side of the Government, as, whilst its enemies must spring from a disarmed population, its new levies would be properly armed, would act in combination with trained and experienced soldiers, and, greatest consideration of all, would be commanded and led by British officers. We hope that, in this matter, the financiers will look well and early to the public interests, and cut down to the safety line as regards the numerical strength of the native armies of the three presidencies.—Englishman, Feb. 8.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE TO UNCOVENANTED OFFICERS.—A case of some importance to uncovenanted officers relative to travelling allowances has just been decided by Government. An uncovenanted officer, transferred from a sister Presidency to a responsible post in Calcutta on a higher emolument, applied for travelling allowances to join his new appointment, but the Government of India in the Financial Department decided that when an uncovenanted officer, employed in one Presidency, is appointed to a post in another on a higher salary, no travelling allowance is to be granted to him in that case; but when the salary is less than that of his previous appointment the allowance will be granted according to the rules of the service.—Hurkaru.

THE CARNIVAL OF TRAVANCORE.

In no part of India, not even at Benares, Muttra, and Pooree, do we find the rites of Hindooism practised with such pomp, or carried out with so perfect an organisation, as in the native State of Travancore, at the very extremity of the peninsula. Side by side with enlightened efforts on the part of the Dewan, whose career we lately described, to spread education and intelligence, we have a system of worship more intimately allied with the administration of the State than any ever witnessed since the Jewish Theocracy. The theory is that none but a Brahmin can be sovereign, and so the Rajah, by issuing from a golden cow, becomes one of the twice-born. So recently as 1811 the State assumed the management of all the chief pagodas in the country, receiving all offerings and supporting the enormous establishments of priests and dancing girls. In a population of a million and a quarter, of whom a tenth are slaves, a return made by the late Dewan shows that there were 1,488 pagodas under the management of the State and 1,408 in villages, all ministered in by "Shanthies" who, like the Levites of old, have a fixed term of service of from six to three years, during which they dare not even speak to women. The performance of daily worship and the periodical festivals in the great pagoda of Trevandrum alone, cost £15,104 annually. The Rajah has only a vote in the select vestry which manages the temple.

The mingled magnificence and folly of most of the ceremonies in Travancore will be best understood from one named the "Mura-Japam," which is performed once in six years, at a cost of £20,000, during the eight weeks beginning the 19th of November. Mura is a Malayalam word, meaning "due succession," and Japam in Sanskrit expresses the muttering of prayers. The object of the ceremony, first performed about a century and a quarter ago, is the destruction of enemies, and the prosperity of the country. About four thousand Malay-also Brahmins, termed Numboories, assemble. They are not all considered of the same purity of caste, and, therefore, their emoluments vary. A year before the ceremony itself preparations commence. In several places within the fort of Trevandrum sheds are erected for the priests and as storehouses. A day or two previous to the commencement of the ceremony the stores are visited by the Rajah. At the same time a Numboory, whose hereditary profession is medicine, causes several sorts of pills, powders, electuaries, and scented oils to be prepared. Most of the Numboories come in from the Cochin territories and Malabar. All their travelling expenses are paid, and they get sumptuous meals in all the charity mess-houses on the way. Their chiefs are supplied with palanquins, and come on special written invitations from the Rajah. They do not actually take part in the ceremonies, but their very presence is considered sanctifying.

The ordinary Numboories perform their Japum thrice a-day. In the morning and afternoon they pray inside the pagoda, and after sunset in the tank. The Rajah and others make Pradakshinam (perambulation) to the Numboories, as they stand knee-deep in water, and mutter prayers for regular returns of rain. The sides of the tank are covered with cocoanut leaves, to prevent the profane eye from looking on. Each Brahmin is paid two Travancore fanams for the morning, one for the evening, and half for the afternoon prayers—in all about a shilling. The inferior Brahmins are allowed to join the Numboories only in the afternoon and evening prayers, with the exception of such as are thoroughly versed in the Vedas, and can pass a prescribed test. The true Numboories do not undergo any examination. All of them are very sumptuously fed in the pagoda morning and evening. At noon rice gruel with curries is served out to them. The cooks and overseers are Tamil Brahmins specially enrolled. From father to son the special employment descends, and it is a sort of ceremony for the Dewan to hear the roll of their names read before him. Recommendations come in from all sides to fill up vacancies, and to obtain a change from heavier to lighter duties for them. The overseers, rice cooks, sweetmeat cooks, curry cooks, cocoanut grinders, water-drawers, water-servers, sandal-wood grinders, carriers of seat planks, salt and pickle servers, gruel cooks, &c., make up altogether upwards of 500 men, and after performing their respective works partake of the viands prepared for the Numboories. The sheds in which the Numboories live are supplied with rows of shabby wooden cots, with a weaving of coir rope on the top as a support. The holy men are also furnished with a suit of gunny cloth and a coarse carpet. Every night when they emerge after supper from the pagoda they are supplied with torches, which they shake as they walk on.

For seven weeks the Numboories fully enjoy the carnival. They walk every thoroughfare, bazaar, suburb, and public place. They cannot be prevented from entering even palaces and speaking indecencies. Often the oddest circumstances occur to them. There is a clock tower in Trevandrum, in which there is a large puppet supplied with iron jaws, which it opens and closes as often as the clock strikes. An unusually inquisitive Numboory was one noon standing near it when it was about to strike 1 p.m. When the mouth opened his curiosity led him to insert his hand in it, and then came down the upper jaw, which pounded his fingers to a jelly. There he had to stand till the puppet gaped again when the clock struck. Another man was caught in the clutches of a leopard to whose cage he approached too close. Another broke a large mirror in the Rajah's palace by knocking against it, supposing it to be a doorway. There is a degree of antagonism between the Numboories and Tamil Brahmins, as the latter are entirely excluded from participating in the pleasures. They cannot even return the ridiculous epithets used by the Numboories during these seven weeks. On the beginning of the eighth week the Tamil Brahmins are allowed to take food with the Numboories, though they have no other privileges. Then there is a rush, and the Numboories, numerically and physically weaker than the Tamil Brahmins, begin to decamp one by one. On the last day of the carnival, which is called Laksha Deepum (one lakh of lights), all Brahmins and Numboories receive each a copper lota filled with gingerly seed and a sum of about Rs. 7. At night there is a grand illumination inside the Pagoda. All the sheds are removed, the yards are filled with rows of bamboo frame work of various designs, and small earthen vessels to hold oil are placed all over them. These, and other lights, such as large flambeaux and pyramidal lamps, are lit up at night. The Rajah and others attend the ceremony, which people from great distances flock to witness. The Rajah finally dismisses the Numboory chiefs with rich presents, and the carnival is at an end.

Such is the greatest national festival of Travancore, described from native sources. Not unlike the harvest-home feast of tabernacles among the Jews, in the booths, the water and the torches made of the linen of the priests, how different is the Mura Japum in its indecencies, its priestly exclusiveness, its sensualities! The most difficult task of the founders of the Indian Church of the future will be, as it was in the first three centuries, to graft Christian propriety on festivals steeped in heathen abominations. Let us hope that such feasts as the Mura Japum, half a century hence, will be at once as joyous and innocent as the occasion which gave rise to the finest of the Jewish songs.—Friend of India.

PARTICULARS OF THE LOSS OF THE STEAMER "BURMAH."

This ill-fated vessel had the following first-class passengers on board for Madras from Calcutta and the Northern Ports:—Mr. and Mrs. Hudson and three children, Mr. Saunders, Mr. C. Simpson, Mr. Hicks, Dr. Scott, Lieut. W. Worster, Lieut. Sherman, Lieut. Rennick, Captain Hunter, Lieut. Wetherall, Captain Fulton, Mrs. G. Meppen and two children, and Mrs. Clarkson. There were also some twenty second-class passengers—men, women, and children—and several natives.

Nothing particular appears to have occurred on the voyage, which had promise of terminating pleasantly and successfully,—everybody turning in on Sunday night, Jan. 25, with the assurance that they would reach Madras in safety by eight o'clock the following morning. The vessel was making ten or eleven knots an hour on Monday morning. A little before five a.m. it was reported to the captain that a light was visible, and the captain, taking this for the Madras Light, bore up for it—but it eventually proved to be a fire on the beach. It is believed that the lead was going, because immediately afterwards five fathoms were reported as the soundings. The captain then ordered the engines to be backed, but as the vessel was going under full sail and all her steam power, the order could not be promptly obeyed; and in consequence of the great speed at which the vessel was going, the engines could not be reversed. Much valuable time was thus lost, for by the time the speed was checked, the ship took the ground, bow on the beach, about five a.m.; meantime, the engines continued to back, but without any effect. By this time the passengers were roused by the commotion, and rushing on deck, found themselves in close proximity to the cocoanut trees on the beach, which were distinctly visible even before daylight.

The first excitement over, the weather being tolerably fair, it was resolved to send one of the ship's boats under sail to Madras with Mr. Hicks, the company's agent (who happened to be a passenger), as it was known that the steamer Sydney was in the roads, and it was hoped by some that with her assistance the Burmah might be got off from her perilous position. There were those on board, however, who knew and said that a ship once fairly in the Madras surf never got afloat again; and if this knowledge had been acted upon immediately—the weather being comparatively fine—and the passengers then immediately landed, they might have been saved much of the privation and danger which they subsequently endured. About ten a.m. a catamaran under sail from the north came up to the Burmah and offered assistance, and brought some coolies on board, who helped to lighten the ship by throwing cargo overboard; two horses and two ponies were also safely got ashore with the aid of the catamaran. The chief officer, Mr. Thoms, also got on land by this means for the purpose of attaching a line on shore, which he succeeded in doing. Even now some of the passengers were willing to take their chance on the catamaran, but the captain recommended that they should wait until the arrival of the Sydney, as he was not apprehensive of the Burmah not holding together for some time. Thus exhorted to patience, the passengers watched anxiously all day for the Sydney, which at length showed her lights about eleven p.m. In the meantime, the sea gradually rose, the surf increased, and the weather became squally and wet. About midnight the Burmah boats from the Sydney attempted to return to her own ship, which had now further drifted into the surf, and in trying to get to leeward of the Burmah the boat was swept ashore, happily without injury or damage; and thus both the first and third officers of the Burmah with the boat's crew were on shore on Monday night. It was found to be utterly vain to attempt anything more that night, the remainder of which was passed in a state of misery and anxiety by all on board, which can be far better imagined than described; getting into bed or courting sleep was altogether out of the question.

Early on Tuesday morning it was found that the catamaran crew had disappeared, taking away with them during the night their catamaran; and at daylight the Sydney sent off two of her boats—one the lifeboat, with a strong crew—and they endeavoured to approach the wreck, but in consequence of the high sea and surf they could not get nearer than speaking, or rather shouting distance, where they threw out grapnels. The passengers now learned to their dismay that no Masula boats had come with the Sydney, the boats taken in tow by her having parted and drifted away. The Sydney's lifeboats parted about 7 a.m. from her hawser, and spite of all the efforts of the crew she gradually drifted through the surf and was dashed to pieces on the shore; one of the Lascars having got his leg broken. Thus Mr. Beresford, the second officer, and the boat's crew of the Sydney, also found themselves on shore.

From daylight up to this time unceasing and strenuous efforts were made to get a line on shore by swimmers and rockets and every conceivable means; but all these efforts proved fruitless, for the rockets would not carry and the swimmers could not get through the surf, until at last Mr. Thoms, the chief officer of the Burmah, who it will be remembered had got ashore the previous evening, by great exertion managed to collect a sufficient number of hands to man the ship's boat, which had got to land at midnight, and he manfully succeeded in carrying it through the surf with a light line until he was met by a lascar who swam from the wreck with another line. These being joined were attached to a heavy hawser on the wreck, and the boat returned to the beach, where eventually the hawser was secured to some poles. The conduct of all the ladies and children throughout this trying period has been represented to us in the most glowing terms; they conducted themselves most nobly, commanding by their calmness and fortitude the admiration of the other passengers.

A chair was now rigged on the line fastened ashore to move on a block, and the second engineer volunteered to try the experiment of getting ashore in the chair, hoping that the ladies might be encouraged to follow his example; but in doing this his life was nearly sacrificed, for he was dragged under water for a great distance, and only reached the shore with considerable difficulty. Despair and anguish now seized upon many of the unfortunate passengers. The catamaran gone, the life-boat dashed to pieces, this last experiment of the chair, to which all trusted proving completely unsuccessful, and all human aid or succour seeming further off than ever, it was no wonder that the ladies and children gave way, and that all their fortitude had forsaken them.

The stoutest heart might have well quailed at the terrible dangers which seemed to surround the Burmah and its living freight—for the weather grew thicker, heavy rain came on, and the violence of the surf increased. Great distress and anxiety prevailed on all sides, and invited by the ladies the passengers joined in humble prayer to Almighty God—entreating succour and protection; one gentleman read a suitable portion of Scripture, while another poured forth in earnest prayer the sorrows and cries of many trembling hearts to Him who has encouraged His people to call upon Him in the time of trouble. Having thus commended themselves to the protection of their Heavenly Father, and comparative calmness being restored, renewed efforts were made to devise means for quitting the wreck, which could not hold together much longer, for the sea became rougher, and it was with the utmost difficulty that the Sydney's second boat was able to get back to that vessel, while the Burmah's remaining boats, one slung on the starboard and the other on the weather side, were dashed to pieces against the vessel, the Sydney returning to Madras for Masula boats.

The officers and men belonging to the Sydney and Burmah, who were on shore, after great trouble and exertion succeeded in discovering the missing catamaran and her runaway crew, and induced them, with promises of reward, to return to the wreck, which they did with the utmost reluctance; but having once fairly commenced they worked like slaves, and well earned their reward. The catamaran then, with the aid of the line, made about twenty trips to the wreck, taking the ladies and children across first—a gentleman accompanying them each trip; and all were landed in this way by about three P.M., the captain having been the last man to leave the wreck.

A tent was erected, some of the sails having been got ashore, together with a scanty supply of provisions, and the ladies and children were provided for as well as could be expected. In the meantime, the natives were induced to give up two of their huts for the night, as it was raining heavily. The passengers have lost very nearly everything belonging to them, and all landed necessarily in the lightest possible clothing—some, indeed, in a state of semi-nudity, while all, of course, were completely drenched in getting through the surf. A bale of long cloth which was washed ashore was immediately opened, and supplied raiment and sheeting, and thus passed another miserable night.

Wednesday morning, the 28th, dawned on an empty larder, and it was therefore resolved that the passengers should proceed inland for about half a mile to the canal, the officers and crew remaining on the beach with a view to get by boat to Coromandel, which they reached about ten o'clock. Here, fortunately, they fell in with a small supply of provisions, which were being sent from Madras to one of the passengers, and this sufficed for present wants. Further supplies were procured from Pulicat, and having set sail again, the wrecked party reached the basin at Madras about seven in the evening, and hastened away to their respective homes, thankful to find themselves once again safe on shore, although in tatters and rags.

Few, we are assured, can form any idea of the wretchedness and misery to which the whole party had been subjected since Monday morning, while the inimitable energy and noble exertions of Mr. Thoms, chief officer of the Burmah, for the relief of the passengers are described as beyond all praise. The bravery and presence of mind displayed throughout by Mr. Thoms under the trying circumstances in which he was placed, demand the warmest acknowledgment, and we do trust that this gentleman will receive, what he fully deserves, not only the thanks, but some tangible acknowledgment of the directors of the company. Mr. Beresford, of the Sydney, and the second and third officers of the Burmah, are also entitled to their warmest acknowledgments for their unremitting labours. It is worthy of note that up to Wednesday morning no policemen made their appearance at the wreck, and everything that came on shore was left pretty much to take care of itself. On Wednesday morning the Burmah's back was broke, and the sea was making a clean sweep over her. Several of the Lascars and ship's company jumped overboard, and, while some got safely ashore, it is believed that five at least have been drowned.

Mr. Smith, the deputy-collector, was met at Pulicat by the passengers with Coolies and provisions, so that the officers and men at the wreck would have all their wants well supplied.

The loss of this really fine vessel is much to be deplored, and we heartily sympathise with Capt. Ashton in his trouble, as from his gentlemanly and disinterested conduct he has gained the respect, confidence, and esteem of all who have come into contact with him.

The captain and officers of the Sydney deserve great praise for the alacrity with which they listened to the call of distress, and although they were unable actually to render any effective assistance, they did all that Englishmen and gentlemen could do under the circumstances.—Madras Times.

MISSIONARY PROSELYTES.

It is truly wonderful what a vast amount of evil may be created in this world of sorrow, by what are called conscientious people, and never did we perceive a more striking instance of the truth of this aphorism than in a charge which has been recently brought against Wesleyan ministers in Madras of having kidnapped a youth for missionary purposes. We believe that the charge in a legal point of view, was wholly unwarranted, and, indeed, the case was dismissed by the magistrate who heard the evidence. We also believe that the missionary in question is an earnest, self-sacrificing and conscientious man. But at the same time we know that this, and a previous case of similar character, have produced an antagonism to Christianity in the Madras Presidency within the last four or five years, which is plainly perceived by the missionaries themselves, and which has excited a sense of wrong against the teachers, and a hostility to Bible teachings, which are certainly not to be found in Bengal.

Before reviewing the particular case, we wish to make a few preliminary observations. Few are better prepared to admit than ourselves that a vast amount of unascertainable good is being effected by the extension of Missionary schools; and we thoroughly endorse the judgment of Macaulay, that it is not necessary that a man should be a Christian to wish for the propagation of Christianity in this country. The proceedings of the Wesleyan Missionary in the present case are, however, open to condemnation, because they are calculated to neutralise the common efforts which are being made for the spread of Christianity. The facts are as follows:—A boy named Coopa Row, about two or three years ago, began to attend a Missionary school in Tanjore. At that time he appeared to be about fourteen years of age, and consequently at the present time he seems to be about sixteen; his father, indeed, swears that he is still under fourteen, and brought a horoscope and witnesses to prove the statement, but this point we shall have to comment upon presently. It seems that Coopa Row recently became a convert to Christianity, and the local missionary in Tanjore appears to have refused to give him up to his father, and legal proceedings were commenced by the latter; but subsequently Coopa Row returned for a month to his father's house, and then again joined the missionary. Now, so far, we really see no serious cause of complaint. The youth of seventeen had expressed a desire to embrace Christianity, and no restraint was apparently laid either upon his return to his father's house, or upon his residence with the missionary. But Coopa Row was to be made the subject of a sensational article in a magazine, or of a sensational speech in Exeter Hall; and, accordingly, the Rev. Ebenezer Jenkins, Wesleyan Missionary at Madras, supplied the young man with postage stamps to pay his railway charges, and thus enabled Coopa Row to fly from Tanjore. Hindoo parents have at least the same affection for their children as European parents, and it is therefore not surprising that the father should have at once set out for Madras, and after eight days' search, should have found him in the house of Mr. Jenkins. But we give the story in the words of the father as recorded in the evidence:—

"After eight days' search in Madras, I learnt that the boy was living with the defendant. I called upon the gentleman, and said, 'My son is here, let him go with me.' He replied, 'Yes, your son has come.' I asked him, 'How did he come?' He answered, 'I sent him his railway charges by postage labels, and he came.' I then asked to see the boy, and the defendant told me to come at twelve o'clock. When I went at twelve o'clock, Mr. Jenkins said, 'Your son is with me, but I won't show him to you.' I then said that I had instituted proceedings against the boy in Tanjore, and as yet no decree had been obtained; it was therefore illegal for the defendant to keep the lad in his possession. I afterwards went to the Commissioner of Police, who issued warrants against the defendant and my son. As I had no horoscope or other documents by me. I applied for two weeks' adjournment, which was granted, and meanwhile I got the documents from Manargudi in Tanjore."

As regards the legal charge of kidnapping, Mr. Jenkins is, we believe altogether innocent. The father and other witnesses, who swore that Coopa Row was not fourteen years of age, most likely purged themselves, and the horoscope was, no doubt, a forgery; for other evidence sufficiently established the fact that the youth must have been at least sixteen years of age. But we are sorry to observe that perjury and forgery on the part of parents and relatives in this country naturally follow on such doubtful attempts at early conversion; for what Asiatic father would hesitate to commit even such a crime, if by so doing he could, as he believed, save the soul of his son? But the question is not to be confined within the limits of law, but must be examined on moral grounds, and we hold that to supply a youth of sixteen with the means of running away from his father, as a preliminary to embracing a faith which that father abhors, is not only an indiscretion, but an injustice and a wrong; and, as such, by fomenting the hostility of the masses, is eminently calculated to check the spread of Christianity, and to excite grave suspicions against missionary schools, in which so large an amount of good might be accomplished, but for such reprehensible proceedings.

We have already said that we believe Mr. Jenkins to be a conscientious man, but we feel that his conscience, at any rate, requires a little enlightenment. It may be said that a Hindoo youth of sixteen is equal to a European young man of twenty or more, but this is only true in one sense. He may be fit for undertaking the duties of a husband or a father, but in all other respects a Hindoo of two-and-twenty is infinitely less independent in thought and action than a European youth of sixteen. Yet even in Europe such early conversions from one faith to another are usually regarded with grave suspicion, and are but too often accompanied by imposture. Our police reports are frequently bringing to light cases of young ladies, who have preferred to have escaped from nunneries, or from Roman Catholic teachings of some kind or other, on the score of conversion, but who have subsequently shown by their conduct that they were totally unworthy of the charity they have received; whilst it is only a week or two back that we transferred to our columns from the Patriot newspaper the history of a scamp who had taken in a number of clergymen in all directions, and of all denominations. This young Hindoo would have been far more likely to have turned out a satisfactory convert if he had remained at Tanjore than by being smuggled away to Madras, where he must be provided not only with a livelihood, but with a wife; circumstances which alone occasion a large amount of scandal, and of libellous scandal, amongst the native community at large.

We believe that we shall be doing some good if we ventilate this point a little. The recent case is not the only one in which Mr. Jenkins has been implicated. It is only two or three years back, as we learn from the Madras papers, that a similar case occurred in which the restoration of a youth was required by the Supreme Court, and when Mr. Jenkins was rather hotly pursued by an infuriated mob. The result of these transactions is not only a vast amount of covert sneers, and insinuations in the native press, but round charges of kidnapping and enticing. The plain facts of the case, which are bad enough in themselves, are exaggerated in every direction, and spread like wildfire through the bazaars into private families. It is unhesitatingly asserted, and no one has any interest in contradicting it, that the youths are enticed by promises of being provided for life, and that the influence of female servants is brought to bear upon the young neophytes. Of course these stories are false, and all Europeans know them to be flagitious lies, but they are received as truths by the mass of the natives, and, unfortunately, there is no one to gainsay them. However, we have reason to know that the conduct of such proselytes as Mr. Jenkins is most properly condemned by the majority of the missionaries themselves, who are satisfied with doing the good work which lies before them, and leaving the results in the hands of Him who alone knoweth the hearts of man. And our chief object in discussing the case is to prevent the native journals, who have pretty generally discussed the proceedings at Madras, from identifying them with those of the general body of missionaries in this country; who have, in most cases, succeeded in securing the confidence of the people amongst whom they have been located, if they have not generally produced the religious impressions which we cannot but hope will some day affect the hearts of the people at large.—Calcutta Englishman, Jan. 25.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE DOVETON COLLEGE.—The eighth annual meeting of the members of the above institution was held on Feb. 13, T. Clarke, Esq., in the chair. The Rev. W. Gray having opened the meeting with prayer, Dr. Vansomeren, the secretary, read the annual report, and the financial secretary furnished the statement of accounts for the past year. The annual report began with a complimentary tribute to the memory of the late Mr. W. Grant, one of the principal benefactors of the college, in whose demise the institution had sustained a grievous loss. During the past year the school had received as the bequest of the late Mr. Carstairs the sum of Rs. 4,000. A library room had been provided, at the request of the Rev. T. Ford, of the Church Missionary Society, for the accommodation of the students desirous of competing for Mr. Cator's prizes. Mr. Adamson's resignation of the head mastership had been accepted with much regret, and would take effect from the 1st of February ensuing. The principal was at present in communication with the Reverends Dr. Halley, and Messrs. Royston and Chapman in England, regarding the selection of a suitable person for the post. The terms, under certain stipulations, were fixed at Rupees 250 a month, besides £160 for outfit and passage money. Mr. R. P. Campbell had kindly offered to furnish the requisite funds for the perpetuation of the Grant Medal, but it was deemed undesirable, as well as uncertain, to leave the awards of such a prize to individual liberality. A subscription list had accordingly been originated, which had been generously headed by the Principal with a donation of Rs. 100. The report then referred to the creditable accounts of the examiners, which were read at the annual distribution of prizes on the 10th Dec. last; and recorded the gratitude of the committee to the gentlemen who had undertaken so laborious a task as further evidence of the value of the education imparted in the college. Its pupils had obtained three out of four of Mr. Cator's prizes, and one had passed the last matriculation test. There were, besides, some of the alumni of the institution who were occupying positions of respectability in different parts of the presidency. The number of youths in the school at the close of the year was 101. The reduction of the boarding charges had not been attended with the anticipated success, the number having decreased by four during the past year. Certain beneficial alterations in the college and girls' school buildings were under reference to a sub-committee. The girls' school attendance had increased to ninety-three, which satisfactory result the committee attributed to the character, acquirements, and ability of Miss Hoblyn, the governess. In connection with the latter branch, music, drawing, and French classes had been opened, and supplied with competent teachers. In the first of these there were fifteen pupils, eight in the second, but, strange to say, not one in the third. The additional charges for teaching these were Rs. 3, 2, and 1, respectively. The salaries of the governess and Miss Anderson, the assistant, had been increased to Rs. 130 and 70 respectively. The report concluded with the financial statement of accounts, which showed Rs. 28,599 (inclusive of Mr. Carstairs' legacy) as the total of receipts during the past year, while the disbursements amounted to Rs. 27,250, leaving a balance of Rs. 1,348 in favour of the institution. It was resolved that the following gentlemen constitute the committee for the ensuing year:—Protestant College Members:—T. Clarke, Esq., H. Frere, Esq., Dr. Vansomeren, and Mr. J. M. Wilson. Elected for the Kirk Session:—The Rev. J. R. McFarlane, Dr. Urquhart, the Rev. W. Gray, the Rev. F. G. Lugard, R. P. Campbell, Esq., J. G. Coleman, Esq., Colonel Maitland, T. W. Taylor, Esq., and Mr. T. W. Wray.

COLONEL OUCHTERLONY'S CONTRACT BUILDING COMPANY.—It is with sincere pleasure that we learn the large support which has been given by the public to Col. Ouchterlony's proposed Contract Building Company. The well-filled share list which he will take with him to England will be the best evidence of the confidence with which the scheme is regarded in this country, and will contribute materially to its favourable consideration by capitalists at home. Nearly 3,000 shares have been subscribed for, representing a capital of £30,000. It is evident that Col. Ouchterlony will have his hands pretty full when he reaches the modern Babylon on the Thames. His intention is to obtain the sanction, and, if practicable, the aid of Government, for communication by rail between the station of the Madras Railway at Coimbatore and the Neilgherry Hills. The importance of such communication it is unnecessary to dwell upon here, and we sincerely hope and, indeed, expect that Government will view the proposition with sufficient favour, to recommend it to the notice of one of the companies at home which have for their special object the construction of such communications.—Overland Athenaeum.

THE RACES.—The following is the inscription on the race cup presented by the Madras Volunteer Guards, to be run for on Saturday evening next:—"1863: Madras Spring Meeting. The Volunteer Guards' Cup, presented by Lieut. Colonel C. H. Drury and the officers of the Madras Volunteer Guards. For all horses, distance 1½ miles; weight for age and inches, won by ———." We believe that the subscription in the corps for the presentation of this piece of plate was proposed by Lieut. G. T. Zillhardt, of No. 3 Company, and cordially entered into by all his brother officers, with the sanction of their commandant, Colonel Drury.

THE RAJAH OF TRAVANCORE.—When in Madras the Rajah of Travancore subscribed Rs. 1,500 to the several vernacular schools of the city which are managed by Hindoos.

BOMBAY.

ADDITIONAL TELEGRAPH FROM BOMBAY TO GALLE.—We hear that a plan has been sanctioned for giving Bombay an additional line of telegraph from Galle. This new line will run from Galle to Cochin, and thence along the west coast through Sedashewgur and Goa (the Portuguese only stipulating for free Government messages), and so on northward to Bombay. It will, of course, be of great importance to this presidency. The construction is likely to commence as soon as material is on the ground.—Gazette.

NUSSEERABAD, Jan. 20.—SIR W. MANSFIELD'S ADDRESS TO THE 28TH REGT.—Events of importance so rarely occur at this station, that I hasten to send you some account of what has taken place here the last day or two. His Excellency Sir William Mansfield, K.C.B., Commander-in-chief, arrived here on Tuesday. On Wednesday morning he had the brigade out, which was put through several manoeuvres by Brigadier Younghusband, C.B., commanding the station. The parade over, the Commander-in-chief complimented the Brigadier on the steadiness of the troops and the day's proceedings. At noon all officers attended a levee at his Excellency's camp, and were introduced to him. That afternoon the 1st Regiment Light Cavalry and 17th Regiment N.I. were inspected, and this morning, Thursday, H.M.'s 28th Regiment. The latter being the great event of the day, I venture to give details. The regiment having received the General with the usual compliments, was narrowly inspected by him; after which it marched past in slow and quick time and in quarter distance column. It was then put through a few manoeuvres by the commanding officer, Lieut.-col. P. Archer Butler, after which it was thrown out into skirmishing order, and performed several intricate and difficult light infantry movements with Major Roberts, second in command, under the immediate orders of his Excellency the Commander-in-chief. These completed, the regiment was drawn up in quarter distance column and addressed by his Excellency in a very impressive manner, as far as memory can serve, in the following words:—"Twenty-eight! I can now tell you, since nearly three years have elapsed since it occurred, that you were at that time reported as not being in that state of efficiency which is to be expected from regiments in the British army. Twice since that period the Major-general commanding the Mhow division of the army has reported to me the excellent state of discipline in which he has found you, have much influence, as the soldiers prefer being commanded by Englishmen. The Nankin expedition will probably be at once reconstructed; and preparations will doubtless be made to hold the city, as the Taepings are fully aware of all that is both in quarters and in the field. I have, therefore, considered it my duty to be most particular in my inspection of you, and, moreover, to put you to a very severe trial. I have done so to-day, and am happy to tell you that I am perfectly satisfied with the result. There has not been a regiment in the presidency for the last three years which could excel, I will even go so far as to say equal, you in manoeuvring. Your marching to-day, both in slow and quick time, was excellent. I not only saw you put through the ordinary movements of a battalion by your lieutenant-colonel, which were executed with precision, but I thought it necessary to put you to a more severe test in the execution of movements not generally performed. The hints were quickly taken up by the officers and promptly carried out, showing thereby that the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment have been well instructed. I have never put any regiment before to so severe a test as I have you to-day, and I am very much pleased with the manner in which you have gone through it. I tell you this in all truth and candour; had you not done so I would have told you just as frankly. I notice, moreover, with pleasure, that there have been but few courts-martial of late in the regiment, and comparatively few minor punishments; I am also informed by your commanding officer that the conduct of the regiment is good. It will, therefore, be my agreeable duty to report most favourably of this inspection to his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, for the information of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge." This afternoon the artillery are to be inspected, and to-morrow the Commander-in-chief leaves this station for Neemuch.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, Jan. 31.—The past fortnight in China and Japan has not been marked by any event of importance. At Peking all is quiet. It is evident that the administration of Mr. Bruce is conceived in a judicious and intelligent spirit. The new policy he has commenced, of patiently submitting under protest to wrongs which do not affect the immediate security of life and property, is likely to keep us out of numerous petty troubles and false positions. From the three northern ports we shall not have regular news for some time to come, owing to communications by sea being closed for the winter. The position of the rebels and of the combined forces intended to operate against them is not so satisfactory as could be desired by the friends of the Imperial cause, and of law and order generally. It was stated in our last issue that General Burgevine, who succeeded Ward in command of the disciplined Chinese, had been treated in such a manner by the Chinese banker who pays the force as to quarrel with him and come to blows. On this the native authorities dismissed him from the command, greatly to the regret of his officers and men. The misunderstanding, unfortunately, led to a complete suspension of the great preparations which had been for some time in progress for the capture of Nankin. No fewer than thirteen steamers had been chartered by the mandarins to take troops to Nankin. Burgevine's force, as before stated, refused to move from Sunkiang until they should receive two months' pay, which was in arrears. It was on this point that bad feeling arose between their commander and his native superiors. Burgevine's conduct is not much blamed by those who reflect on the provocation he received. He declines to consider himself dismissed until so informed from Peking. The Ward Corps is now commanded by Captain Holland, of the Marine Light Infantry, who takes the rank of Brigadier-general in the Chinese service. His appointment has satisfied the corps, who have also received their arrears of pay, and are ready for any service. A native coadjutor to General Holland has been appointed. He is not likely to being done on the other side. There are still predatory bands within the thirty mile radius, but reconnoitring parties of troops go out from time to time and keep the country clear. Beyond the "radius" the Taepings, it is said, consider themselves safe. From Shanghai we learn that the Prussian treaty has been ratified. Owing to the Emperor of Cochin China having repudiated the new treaty with France, and the province of Saigon having revolted from French rule, all the naval and military forces of the French now stationed in China are being withdrawn. This leaves the safety of Shanghai city and district entirely in charge of the British. From the ports on the Yang-tze there is not much news; everything is quiet. The Emperor of China is said to have notified his intention of issuing medals to the officers who have served in the late campaigns against the Taepings. From Ningpo accounts reach us of a contradictory nature. It seems that an attack was recently made upon Shaou-hing, about ninety miles from Ningpo, and held by the rebels. One report says the city was recaptured; other accounts say that it was almost taken, but that the accidental bursting of a gun killed M. Lebrethon and three other Europeans, which disheartened the besiegers so much that they desisted in the attack and retired. From Amoy, Fuhchau, and Swatow there is no particular intelligence. From Canton we hear that Liu, the successor to Laou as Governor-general of the Two Kang, is expected to arrive at his post early next month. We also learn that the vexed question of the Shameen Wall has at last been amicably settled.

The position of foreign residents in Japan, which has not been at all satisfactory for some time, is now proceeding in the usual manner. More warnings have been issued with reference to danger from lawless bands of "loonins," who have left their masters' service. The following notification, issued by Colonel Neale, shows the nature of affairs to be suspicious: "Yokohama, Jan. 3, 1863.—A governor of foreign affairs came at a late hour, last night to her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, and communicated to him that further reports had reached the Gorogio which had occasioned them much anxiety, respecting lawless persons meditating disorders in Yokohama. A band of loonins are reported to be seeking, in the first place, an opportunity of assassinating the foreign representatives. The Japanese Government, in making this communication, declare that they are occupied in tracing this threatened danger to its source, and in adopting every means in their power to restore security. In the meanwhile, they beg that great caution and discretion may be exercised by the foreign community in respect to exposing themselves on the Tokaido and in the neighbourhood. Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires is occupied in remonstrating with the Japanese Government against this condition of affairs, and adopting such measures of precaution with the naval and military authorities as are at present practicable, and which will consist in the arrangements as announced in the previous notification of the 16th ult.—By order of her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, &c., "ABEL A. GOWER."—Overland China Mail.

CEYLON.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY AT COLOMBO, 1862.

1st Resolution.—Moved by Rev. J. Nicholson; seconded by R. V. Dunlop, Esq.:—

"That this meeting acknowledges that as residents in a heathen land, all present are called upon to devote themselves to the work of spreading the Gospel."

2nd Resolution.—Moved by Rev. J. Scott; seconded by Rev. W. E. Rowlands:—

"That this meeting is convinced that all the members of the Church should be prepared for this work by personal piety and constant communion with God, and should unite in earnest supplications for a general outpouring of the Holy Spirit."

3rd Resolution.—Moved by Rev. R. S. Hardy; seconded by Rev. F. Waldo:—

"That this meeting renders devout thanks to Almighty God for the success already vouchsafed to the Missions, and doubts not but that the recent opposition of the Buddhists will tend to the furtherance of Gospel truths in the Island."

The Wesleyan Mission in Ceylon was commenced in the year 1814. The island is divided into two districts, north and south. The northern district includes those parts in which Tamil is spoken; and the southern, those in which Sinhalese is the language of the people. We refer to the southern district alone in the following brief report. It includes at present sixteen stations, or circuits, in each of which there is a resident minister. At one time there were in this district ten European agents; but there are now only four, and the work is principally carried on by ministers who have been born in the island. The rising up of a native ministry is at once a proof of the success of the mission, and of the wish of its directors to confide the work as much as possible to native agency, thereby greatly lessening the expense, and making the instruction given to the people more thoroughly effective than would be possible if carried on entirely by Europeans. So long as the greater part of the funds is sent from England, there must of necessity be Englishmen to superintend its distribution; but as the native churches become independent of foreign aid, they will gradually be left to their own guidance and government, in conformity with the laws and usages of the society whose name they bear.

Last year the entire expenditure of the Mission was £3,700, of which £320 was raised in the island, and £798 expended in the educational department. From the commencement of the Mission the expenditure has been upwards of £200,000. The Mission receives annually a grant from Government of £100, for educational purposes. In addition to the sum of £320, carried to the general account, further sums of considerable amount have been contributed for local purposes. By the Wesleyans of the Morotte station alone, under the care of the Rev. Peter de Zylva, the sum of £73 was raised last year for charitable and church purposes.

The Buddhist controversy, to which reference was made in the last report, still continues, though, perhaps, not with the same intensity of excitement. The old arguments against the Bible and Christianity are repeated with wearisome constancy. The onslaught that the priests and others are making on revealed truth is comparatively harmless, but the ribald virulence with which the character of "Jehovah" is assailed, cannot be listened to without a shudder. Lectures are delivered, and publications, in many forms, are issued from the press, to counteract the effects of the poison thus sought to be infused into the native mind. One good consequence has arisen from this opposition: the sincere have been led to rally round the truth with greater determination, and the insincere have been led to separate themselves from the churches to which they have hitherto been a hindrance and a burden.

The year has been characterised by the coming of a dark cloud upon the members of the Wesleyan Mission, in the removal, by death, of its general superintendent. The late Rev. D. J. Gogerly was a man of no ordinary power of mind. In his knowledge of Buddhistic lore and the Pali language he has had no equal among Europeans, and scarcely an equal among the Sramana priests. On more than one occasion regret has been expressed, by the most eminent Orientalists in England and on the Continent, that he has committed so little to the press; as the few essays and translations he was induced to publish are a rich contribution to our knowledge of eastern philosophy.—Colombo Overland Observer.

SIR HENRY WARD.—We see from the Ceylon papers that a statue to Sir Henry Ward, the late able and popular Governor, is to be erected in Kandy, with the following inscription:—

"SIR HENRY GEORGE WARD, G.C.M.G.,

GOVERNOR OF CEYLON,

From May, 1855, to June, 1860.

"In semi-civilised countries, it is with material improvements that all other improvement begins. My conscience tells me that, to the best of my judgment and abilities, I have tried to do my duty by you, and it is my hope that you will think of me hereafter as a man whose whole heart has been in his work."

THE AMALGAMATION.

Feb. 3.—No. 93.—H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following extracts from a despatch from the Rt. Hon. the Sec. of State for India, No. 314 of Aug. 30, 1862, regarding the formation of an amalgamated general staff for the British and Indian forces:—

Para. 1. "I have received and considered in Council your letter No. 65, dated Feb. 24, 1862, forwarding certain papers relating to the amalgamation of the general staff of the British and Indian forces, and conveying your opinions upon the several schemes that have been proposed with reference to that measure."

8. "You propose that the united head-quarters staff for the several Presidencies should be as follows:—

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Bengal.—1 Quartermaster-gen.; 1 deputy ditto; 1 assistant ditto; 2 dep. assis., ditto.

Madras.—1 Quartermaster-gen.; 1 deputy ditto; 1 assist. ditto.

Bombay.—1 Quartermaster-gen.; 1 deputy ditto; 1 assist. ditto.

9. "I approve of this proposed establishment for the qmr. gen.'s dept. with the head qrs. of the several armies."

10. "You observe with respect to the divisional staff, that several divisions have offic. dep. assis.; and, as these officers are in reality offic. for no one, you think they might be considered permanent without any increase of pay."

11. "I concur with you in this opinion, and also in the propriety of dividing the assis. and dep. assis. of the dept., as nearly as possible, into the proportion of one-third of the former and two-thirds of the latter."

12. "You propose for the amalgamated adjt. gen.'s dept. the following:—

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Bengal.—1 adjt. gen., 1 dep. ditto, 2 assis. ditto, 1 dep. asst. ditto.

Madras.—1 adjt. gen., 1 dep. ditto, 1 asst. ditto, 1 dep. asst. ditto.

Bombay.—1 adjt. gen., 1 dep. ditto, 1 dep. asst. ditto.

13. "I approve generally of this establishment for the consolidated staff in the adjt. gen.'s dept.; but I consider it desirable that the staff proposed by you for the adjt. gen.'s dept. at army head qrs. in Bengal should be increased by one dep. asst. adjt. gen., making in Bengal 1 adjt. gen., 1 dep. ditto, 2 assis. ditto, two dep. assis. ditto."

14. "The appts. of the art. staff will be considered separately."

15. "By the amalgamation of the general staff, and the adoption of the above scale, the following changes will be made."

16. "There will be an abolition of staff offices to the following extent:—

1 adjt. gen., 2 depts. ditto, 1 asst. adjt. gen., 1 brig. maj., 1 qmr. gen., already abolished; 1 dep. qmr. gen., already abolished; 2 asst. qmr. gen., 1 dep. asst.

And the creation of the following:—

4 dep. asst. adjts. gen., 1 asst. qmr. gen., 2 dep. asst. qmr. gen."

17. "The changes involved in the measures of amalgamation now proposed will be carried into effect as soon as possible, consistently with due regard to the interests of present incumbents."

With reference to the above, the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to make the following appointments and promotions:—

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Allowances of Medical Officers.

No. 190.—In promulgating the following Orders of the Government of India, the undersigned has the honour to intimate that the allowances of medical officers in civil employ will, in future, be regulated strictly in accordance with the rules therein contained, according as such officers may belong to one or other of the two classes.

H. A. MANGLES, Offg. Civil Paymaster.
Civil Paymaster's Office, Fort St. George,
Feb. 11, 1863.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India, dated Sept. 4, 1862, No. 391g.

Para. 2. The Governor-general in Council observes that medical officers in civil employ are divided into two distinct classes, viz.:

1st. Medical officers attached to civil stations of Political agencies, and

2nd. Medical officers attached to public institutions, such as the Medical College, and to other civil staff appointments.

3. In the case of the former class, the entire allowances must, H.E. in Council observes, be audited in the Civil Department and adjusted as a civil charge, and such officers cannot, during absence on leave, claim any portion of their salary in the Civil Department, under the Military Furlough Regulations of 1854. But, in the case of the second class, the net military pay must be audited and adjusted as a military charge, and the officers may, during absence on leave, draw absentee allowances from the Civil Department, under the Military Furlough Rules of 1854, and the General Rules regarding the allowances of military officers in civil employ.

4. Medical officers in the Educational Department appear, to H.E. in Council, to belong to the 2nd class.

From the Financial Secretary to the Government of India, to the officiating civil paymaster, Madras, dated Fort William, Council Chamber, Jan. 8, 1863, No. 167g.

SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1,411, of the 8th Oct., 1862, inquiring with reference to financial resolution, No. 329g of the 4th September preceding, which divides medical officers in civil employ into two classes, whether officers attached to "public institutions"—such as hospitals and infirmaries—should be placed in the 2nd class, and how the following appointments should be classified:—

1. Presidency (District) Surgeons.
2. Physician of the General Hospital.
3. Surgeon of do.
4. Superintendent of the Eye-Infirmiry.
5. Do of the Lying-in Hospital.
6. Zillah or Civil Surgeons in the Provinces.
7. Residency Surgeons (Political).
8. Medical Officers on the Neilgherries.
9. Medical Officers in charge of Civil Engineer's Department in the Godavery and Kistna Districts.
10. Principal of the Medical College.
11. Professor of do.
12. Chemical Examiner.

2. In reply, I am desired to explain that the expression, "Officers attached to public institutions, &c.," in the definition of the second class, was intended to distinguish officers employed in teaching the theory of medicine, from officers engaged in the practice of medicine, who belong to the first class; and to state that all the appointments above-mentioned belong to the first class, with the exception of numbers 10 and 11, which should be placed in the second.

(Signed) E. DRUMMOND,
Financial Sec. to the Government of India.

BURIAL OF THE DEAD.

MR. TRISTRAM, of the Bombay Council, with the best intentions, but far too hastily and without proper preliminary inquiries as to the best way of conciliating native prejudices, has proposed a Bill to provide for the proper burial and disposal of the dead. He complains that the way in which the dead bodies of Hindoos and Parsees are now disposed of is injurious to the living. But Hindoo cremation is as inoffensive a mode of treating the lifeless frame as can possibly be conceived. The objection to the mode of sepulture amongst the Parsees is, indeed, a strong one, for it appears that they have what are poetically called Towers of Silence in the immediate neighbourhood of the town of Bombay, where the dead bodies of men, women, and children, of all ranks, and naked as they were born, are thrown together in one promiscuous mass, and left to be devoured by pariah dogs, and crows and vultures. Any practice more barbarous and revolting than this it is difficult to imagine. We should hardly expect to find any practice resembling it amongst the basest savages. And yet Mr. Jugonnath Sunkersett, a Parsee Member of Council, is not ashamed to support the abominable custom of his nation, and to oppose Mr. Tristram's Bill with such energy and obstinacy as to render it impracticable to pass it in its present shape. What is somewhat surprising, is the fact that an English local editor congratulates Mr. Sunkersett on his victory, and on his having proved himself "a fairly efficient Member of the Council."

EUROPEAN VAGRANCY AT BOMBAY.

WE are sorry to hear that there are so many European vagrants and beggars in the bazaars and streets of Bombay that the Local Legislature is compelled to take into its consideration some means of relieving honest poverty, and getting rid of incorrigible idlers and loose characters that disgrace the British name. An English beggar is a rare spectacle in the streets of Calcutta, but in the Lall Bazaar, or Wapping quarter of the City of Palaces, there is something worse than mere beggary or destitution—there are scenes there much more painful for a British patriot and philanthropist to witness than anything that is likely to be met with in Bombay or London. In that awful Oriental Wapping, where our sailors most do congregate, the natives of India witness the very worst phase of British life. At all hours of the day and night there are drunkenness and sensuality, and riot and loud blasphemy in that horrible quarter. Though Calcutta is called a City of Palaces, there are no palaces in the Lall Bazaar—not even ginpalaces, for the gin-shops there, unlike the same class of houses of entertainment in London, are dirty hovels. Some benevolent Englishmen in Calcutta, ashamed that their own countrymen should so expose themselves in the eyes of the natives, and shocked that our brave British tars, or any other class of Christian men, should be tempted into such dreadful self-debasement and wretchedness, have established a respectable and well-conducted "Sailors' Home" in the immediate neighbourhood, where many of the better-conducted seamen take up their residence until their ships require them. But the extreme cheapness of spirituous liquors in India, and the unrestrained liberty and licence of a Calcutta pot-house, and the feebleness and cowardice of the native policemen, who take to their heels in large bodies before a single British tar, are such strong inducements to unlimited self-indulgence and self-abandonment, as the majority of seamen with a full pocket, and after the restraints and deprivations of a long voyage, find it very difficult to resist.

Sir William Mansfield has proposed, in the Legislative Council of Bombay, to bring in a Bill which may meet the great evil of European vagrancy in the midst of the native population; but the local Chamber of Commerce object to several of its provisions, and the whole subject is undergoing a thorough discussion, which may soon lead, we trust, to some satisfactory solution of a very difficult question.

A BRAHMIN CONVERT TO CHRISTIANITY.

In the Nya Nuggur, in Mairwara, where the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland has established a mission station and opened schools in the surrounding villages, the first native convert to Christianity in that quarter was publicly baptized in January last. The convert is not, as native Christians generally are, in a mean condition, social and religious, but is a Brahmin of high caste, a pundit profoundly versed in the Hindu Shasters, and a man highly respected by the members of his own caste and the people of his native city of Allahabad. He seems to be a person of an active and inquiring mind, and fond of travel. He has for several years occupied himself in studying the manners and religions of the various classes of people in the provinces of Northern India, and it was in the course of his travels that he visited the Nya Nuggur, and fell in with the Rev. W. Shoolbred, M.A., the missionary of the station. Something that dropped from this gentleman was like good seed on a good soil. The pundit was struck with a sudden thought that after all that he had heard against Christianity it might yet be the only true religion. He studied the subject with great earnestness and sagacity for many months, and then bravely and honestly and openly renounced Hindooism, and embraced the Christian faith. In the midst of a vast multitude of Hindoos, many of them Brahmins, and in the presence of a few British Christians, this high-caste and intelligent native declared his conviction that Hindooism was a false and immoral creed, and that Christianity, on the contrary, was all purity and truth. In the course of the ceremony of baptism, in a very manly and eloquent address, he gave his reasons for the new faith that was in him. The small body of Christians present at this interesting scene were not wholly without their apprehensions of some religious excitement amongst the natives, who, however, looked on and listened, in profound silence. This quiet and orderly conduct of theirs was the more remarkable, as many malignant and false reports had been industriously circulated in the bazaars peculiarly calculated to rouse the fanaticism of the people. One of these reports was, that cow's blood was to be mixed with the baptismal water. But the missionary persuaded a native of good caste and character to bring the water in his own lota or brass vessel. This judicious proceeding seems to have had a good effect, and at least to have satisfied the natives that no offence was meant to their religious prejudices. We have thought this case worthy of prominent notice, as calculated to gratify very many of our readers who have watched with interest the progress of Christianity in the East.

SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

OUR readers will have heard with profound regret of the death of the gallant Outram, the flower of the Bombay Army, "the Bayard of India, sans peur et sans reproche." Sir James, in his noble modesty, was sincerely of opinion that his country had many a better servant than himself in India and elsewhere; but taking him "for all in all" we cannot but feel that "We ne'er shall look upon his like again."

For he was not merely a mere soldier, a man of might and courage in the field—nor even a mere statesman or administrator; for he joined to the qualities that fit a man for great and responsible public posts, the rarest and most estimable of the personal characteristics and accomplishments that make an individual beloved and honoured, nay, almost idolized, in private life. He was so modest and humane—with such a womanly tenderness and delicacy of nature—

"And of his port as meek as is a maid"—

so fitted for the gentlest duties of domestic life—so happy in the society of women and children—so fond at all times of simple pleasures and innocent pastimes—so guileless and yielding—that it was difficult for those who knew him in the social circle to understand his energetic heroism in battle and his firm wisdom in the cabinet. His rival, Sir Charles Napier, was quite as brave and energetic as Sir James Outram; but then he was impetuous, and hot-headed, and suspicious, and even unjust (however unintentionally); and scarcely one great man in the long and brilliant list of gifted and famous British Indian heroes and statesmen could be mentioned that had not some speck of human frailty with which to gratify envious and malignant criticism. But we never heard a whisper of objection against the name of Outram. He truly won golden opinions from all sorts of people, wherever he went. He was beloved by all who came in contact with him. Our readers are too familiar with the main circumstances of Outram's noble and brilliant career to need any recapitulation of his claims to a prominent place in the history of British India. The fact that perhaps is ever most present to his admirers when the fame of Outram is alluded to, is the truly chivalrous and magnanimous self-denial which he exhibited towards Havelock, when he was entitled to supersede him in his military command at Lucknow. "To you," he said to Havelock, "shall be left the glory of relieving Lucknow, for which you have already so nobly struggled." Sir James Outram then took the place of a mere volunteer by the side of Havelock. Nothing finer than this is recorded of Sir Philip Sydney, whose life was poetry put into action. The noble Outram, who served when he might have commanded, with all his modesty could not but know that he was peculiarly qualified for the work he so generously abnegated, for no man was better acquainted with Lucknow and the surrounding country, and no man was more thoroughly possessed of the confidence of the troops which he might so surely have led to glory. Quiet in his manner, and with a kind word for every one, this true hero was justly described by an officer who had fought by his side as "one whom the hottest and deadliest fire, the gravest responsibility, or the most perilous and critical juncture, could neither excite nor flurried."

BOOKS.

Letter to Lord Stanley, on the Dearth of Cotton, and the Capability of India to Supply the Quantity Required. By W. F. Fergusson, Agent for the Landholders and Commercial Association of British India. London: A. H. Bailey and Co., Royal Exchange-buildings, and William Ridgway, 169, Piccadilly, W.

Mr. W. F. Fergusson is well known in India as a man of great ability, and as one well acquainted with mercantile transactions there, and the condition of the people, both Native and European. He was accordingly elected secretary to, or agent for, the Landholders and Commercial Association of British India, as a person peculiarly well fitted to represent their interests. In this letter to Lord Stanley he has explained the capabilities of India for the supply of good cotton at cheap rates very distinctly and satisfactorily. But he warns us that we are not to depend on native agencies alone, and admits very freely that Indian cotton has hitherto been the worst description of cotton yet supplied to the markets of Europe. He shows us how with good seed and careful cultivation, and prepared and packed under European supervision, the cotton of India might be rendered quite equal to that of America, and be quite as cheap. This would be a great blessing, not for England only, but for all India, for her hundred and eighty millions wear scarcely any other garments than those made of cotton cloth, which is used, too, by them for many purposes to which it is never applied in Europe. For two successive years, India, after her own wants were supplied, furnished a million of bales for exportation without any considerable rise in price. The quantity, therefore, will be more than sufficient to supply our need, and may be indefinitely increased;—the only question, as Mr. Fergusson says, is as to the quality of it, and that, he thinks, will depend upon the nature of the seed supplied and the amount of European superintendence engaged in its cultivation and in its preparation for the market. At present, under native agency alone, in the stuff called cotton all sorts of tricks are practised upon the unhappy purchaser, even stuff ripped out of old quilts and bedding being mixed up by the native cotton dealers with better material. The best Dharwar cotton is often cunningly shown on the surface of the bales, which are filled up inwards with baser matter. The following are amongst the Indian tricks of trade exposed by Mr. Fergusson:—

"That such would be the case every one acquainted with the internal trade and local traffic of India well knew and foretold. It is not only with cotton that this occurs. Ask Durant, the eminent silk broker, if since the East India Company had to give up the manufacture which was entirely in their hands, under European superintendence, the raw silk of Bengal has not been so lowered in quality as to be almost driven out of the market, because the natives case each skein with good silk, and fill up the interior with coarse and inferior thread. For the same cause the silk piece goods have almost entirely lost the European market, being filled with starch and gum, instead of silk. Native manufactured indigo and lacye are almost always mixed in the chest, the inferior being in the centre, and out of sight. The chief difficulty that the refiners of sugar have had to encounter, and which has made many abandon their works, is the fraudulent admixture with various foreign substances of the inspissated juice or goor, brought to them for sale. Linseed, poppy, and other valuable seeds, are mixed with inferior grains, and nothing but the strong hand and power of Government, directed by European agents, ensuring prompt punishment, prevents their opium being equally adulterated. Importers of European goods will tell the same tale of adulteration. Crosse and Blackwell know that the labels of their pickles and jams are imitated and struck off in the Presidency towns, and that high prices are given for empty jars with their undamaged labels by the native dealers. The value is well known which is put on empty China tea-boxes to be refilled with a mixture of good tea and dried leaves that have once been used. The records of the criminal courts will show how natives will spend their days and lives in drilling a hole with a needle in a rupee, and extracting three-halfpence worth, or six to seven per cent., of silver, which is replaced with lead, in order to make it so little under weight that the fraud is not easily discovered. In fact, fraud seems to be natural, and preferred, and its detection is followed by no reprobation on the part of the native public, nor is any shame evinced by the actors."

Mr. Fergusson is very severe on Sir Charles Wood, both on the score of the stoppage of the sale of waste lands and the Breach of Contract Bill. No doubt these proceedings will produce great temporary inconvenience both to European settlers and indigo planters, but it does not follow that they are to be permanently objected to on account of an immediate or partial evil. We are quite as much impressed as Mr. Fergusson himself can be with the immense advantage both to India and to England which would infallibly result from the wide introduction into the former country of European enterprise and skill, and energy and capital, for the purposes of cultivating and turning to account the vast and hitherto too-neglected resources of our Oriental empire.

Mr. Fergusson argues that it is only a fraudulent breach of faith for which the planters propose a punishment (and it must be admitted that all fraud deserves to be punished, and that it is to the common interest that it should meet with its deserts); but, then, so broad a line ought to be drawn between fraud and misfortune that there should be as little risk as possible of an honest man being treated criminally for an unforeseen obstacle to the completion of a civil contract. The question of fraud should not be carried before a purely civil tribunal. Surely the indigo planters ought to have been more than satisfied with the old regulation of the Supreme Government of India (passed in 1823), which enabled them to institute a summary suit against a ryot who failed to complete his engagement; for, to use Mr. Fergusson's own words, "by Section V. of that regulation, if no fraud or dishonesty be proved, and the failure of the ryot be owing to accident, the penalty adjudged against the contractor shall not exceed three times the sum advanced, with interest." This was stringent enough in all conscience for cases in which the contractor fails not through fraud, but mere accident; and even Mr. Fergusson admits that in the North-West Provinces it led to much oppression. The oppressors in this case were natives; and we must confess that they were more likely to abuse their power than our countrymen are; but we would trust no class of people over weak subordinates. Sir C. Wood, in our opinion, rightly objects to punish criminally the breach of a civil contract as contrary not only to the principles of English law but as contrary to the eternal and universal principles of abstract justice. But Sir Charles forgets, says Mr. Fergusson, that sailors are punished with hard labour if they leave their ships on the temptation of higher wages. But the laws relating to seamen and soldiers are necessarily particular or exceptional, for we must arm a commanding officer in the battle-field or on the wide seas where he is beyond the reach of aid or protection from the general laws of his country, with temporary power to meet emergencies which might involve the loss of very many lives or of many fortunes. The mere disobedience of an order then becomes a crime, because where discipline is destroyed mutiny and anarchy must follow. It often happens in a foreign port that sailors out of personal illwill to their captain, or on the temptation of higher wages, desert their ship in a body, to the almost incalculable and irreparable injury of the captain and passengers, and the owners of the vessel. Such a breach of contract is not innocent or accidental, but positively wilful and criminal, and, therefore, requires to be punished with a penalty more or less severe. That the ryots are, generally, dishonest must at once be admitted. Men who, for successive generations, have been in a state of gross ignorance, and without personal independence, almost invariably are so; for they know not their own true interests, and have no self-respect. And no doubt the temper of the indigo planter is often sorely tried by his dark-haired subordinates, and he feels very naturally that he ought to be protected by the laws from gross frauds in his transactions with them. He ought to be so undoubtedly, and we hope he soon will be; but just legislation can rarely be hurried, and is not so easy as it seems; and human wisdom is often sadly at fault in its dealings between man and man. The late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, we believe, was actuated by the very best intentions, and his ideas of abstract justice were perfectly correct; but he was practically wrong in his application of right principles, because his interference with the existing state of the relations between the planter and his ryot was ill-timed and ill-considered; so that, while protecting the interests of the one party, he ruined the interests of the other, and in the end both parties suffered.

Mr. Fergusson tells us that under Lord Canning's rules respecting the sale of Waste Lands hundreds of thousands of acres were applied for; while under Sir Charles Wood's rules there has not been an application for a single acre. We suspect that this is rather an exaggerated statement; but yet if it be only partially true, it indicates a result which Sir C. Wood could hardly have desired; and we are not so much his out-and-out supporters as to insist on his infallibility, either as a legislator or a statesman. The two questions, that of the Sale of Waste Lands and that of the Contract Law, are still fairly open to discussion, and it is pretty obvious that both demand more impartial consideration, and more knowledge and more wisdom for their satisfactory and final settlement than have yet been brought to bear upon them. Matters connected with these questions cannot be long suffered to remain as they now are.

[SECOND NOTICE.]

We promised in our last to return to the subject of Mr. Langford's claim to be regarded as "one of our Indian celebrities." We deny that he can be so designated. Comparatively speaking, very few Anglo-Indians are familiar with his name, but it does not follow that he has no claim to be better known. What is called "a publication" in India is often a secret to every one but the author and his printer. The Delhi Gazette, which so oddly describes Mr. Langford as "a celebrity not unknown to fame," seems to know little of the man or his circumstances. We do not ourselves know much more, but we can add to the fact that he has been "a gunner," that he was once employed as a sort of sub-editor and reader in the office of the Calcutta Englishman, and that he subsequently visited England for the recovery of his health, having suffered, if we remember rightly, from a stroke of the sun. He endeavoured to get employment on the English press, but as he was a perfect stranger in London, no newspaper office here had a place for him. His latest separate publication is a poem entitled "The Steam and the Wire," which originally appeared as a contribution to the Calcutta Literary Gazette. The following specimens of the poem are very spirited:—

Then were the rich lands tenantless, the valleys and the hills,
Where EUROPE slept in silence, with her forests and her rills;
COLUMBIA's verdure went and came, her foliage and flowers
Bloomed, withered, died, and mouldered on, 'mid sun and storm and showers.
The wild beast roared in solitude, whilst flashing on the night,
The bright AURORA of the POLE, as now, displayed its light!

No human eye to gaze on them, no tongue to murmur joy,
No bark upon the silent lakes, no weapon to destroy;
Save in the withered woods alone, where flashing bolts from heaven
Uplit the scene, and poured the fire, amid the branches riven!
Then, with no human eye to gaze, the forest blazed on high,
And prairies clad in lurid flame, towered, threatening to the sky!

Then was the OCEAN desolate, e'en as it was of old,
When by His will, primeval waves, from NIGHT and CHAOS rolled!
And harmless tempests swept along, ere Commerce yet had birth,
Or WAR had stretched her ruthless arm, save on the solid earth;
And EUROPE's rivers slept in peace, as yet untinted with gore,
Save that of beasts which drank and fought, and perished on the shore!

COLUMBIA is not desert now, man's Engines, too, are there,
Unceasingly, unwearily, their sounds are in the air;
And there, as on Old EUROPE's soil, is placed the magic WIRE,
Which quivering sends a thousand miles swift as Electric fire
The plans of man, whatever they be, for COMMERCE, WAR, or CRIME,
DEATH—FAMINE, on the silent string, flash on from o'er to o'er!

Beneath the bosom of the Deep IDEAS flash along,
A Triumph of the mind untold in Prophecy or Song!
And monsters of its oozy bed along the CABLE glide,
Whilst silently the words of MAN are quivering by their side!
Along Newfoundland's misty coast the towering icebergs roll,
And LANGUAGE flashes through the sea 'neath fragments from the Pole!

O'er swamp and forest, sand and soil, still glideth silent THOUGHT,
And travelling through COLUMBIA's streams, sets rain and storm at naught.
Upon the arid plains of IND, her streams and jungles o'er,
Whilst Murder shrieks upon the blast, and prowling tigers roar;
Birds lighting on the magic cord know not the electric fire Which, gliding through their claws, proclaims the triumph of the WIRE!

And they of mourning England,* Prince, Peasant, Priest, or Press,
Are guided by that speechless thing, "the lightning wire's express."
Ere yet upon the battle-field the British slain are cold,
The tide of anguish, gleam of joy, hath o'er the nation rolled!
They feel not for themselves alone, they weep for others' loss,
Where wave again the TRICOLOUR, the CRESCENT, and the CROSS!

* An allusion to the Crimean War.

Mr. Langford's longest and most ambitious work is still the one of which the title heads our article, though it was published so long ago, and was, we believe, the very first volume of English verse printed in the land of the five rivers. It is a curiosity on this account, if on no other. But with all its defects, and they are very numerous, it is a work that indicates very considerable literary talent and poetic feeling.

We do not think it necessary to give an analysis of the story of "Alvin of Erie;" but as we have alluded to its defects, we may as well show of what nature they are, because they furnish a curious proof that all men are not only not born poets, but that some men of even a naturally poetic turn of mind are sometimes very long indeed in acquiring the accomplishment of verse. We were personally acquainted with a writer who, in his earlier compositions, was most ludicrously false in rhythm—who at first could not see his errors when pointed out to him and explained—and who yet lived to write very smoothly and correctly, and to acquire such popularity as a poet that the sale of his publications secured him a very handsome income.

Mr. Langford's "Alvin of Erie" is composed in stanzas of ten syllable quatrains of alternate rhymes, with a rhyming couplet, the last line being an Alexandrine. This Alexandrine conclusion of a stanza has a full and sweeping harmony when well arranged, but no form of metre is so frequently mismanaged. Nothing can be more satisfactory to the ear than the conclusion of most of Byron's Spenserian stanzas, though even he sometimes fails. Take the following as a specimen of his best:—

"Once more upon the waters! Yet once more!
And the waves bound beneath me as a steed
That knows its rider. Welcome to their roar!
Swift be their guidance whereso'er it lead!
Though the strained mast should quiver as a reed,
And the rent canvas fluttering strew the gale,
Still must I on; for I am as a weed,
Flung from the rock on Ocean's foam to sail
Where'er the surge may sweep, the tempest's breath prevail."

The Alexandrine here, it will be observed, is divided exactly in half—that is to say, the voice of the reader is suspended midway, as if instead of one line of twelve syllables it were composed of two lines of six syllables each. If the caesural pause be not placed after the sixth syllable the rhythm is Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh.

The six iambic beats should also correspond with the proper pronunciation of the words and the emphasis of sense. No word should be divided by the metre. Now let us see how our Anglo-Indian poet's Alexandrines will stand the test—

To revel in the dark—ness of their liquid plain.

Forth from within the brain—less cell a tree doth shoot.

And rank putrescence now—rieth sweet flowers of May.

And nature in her sol—itude, with verdure smiled.

Unsought for in his pa—rent's solitary roof.

The bold blasphemer or—the Atheist sui-oide.

The one bore crime, the oth—er innocence upon his brow.

This last specimen is a verse of fourteen syllables. To read it as a twelve syllable line we must strike off the first syllable of upon and contract innocence into in'cence. As thus—

The one bore crime, the oth—er in'cence on his brow.

If the lines we have quoted are read metrically correct pronunciation and the emphasis of sense must be sacrificed; if read without such sacrifice they are rough prose. We cannot understand how any man with any sense at all of the harmony of verse can blunder so grossly in the construction of the Alexandrine as many even of our most eminent poets have sometimes done; but Mr. Benjamin Franklin

Langford perpetually vexes the reader with lame Alexandrines. Their sins are exceptions—his are the rule. His Alexandrines illustrate Pope's well-known line—

And like a wounded snake—drag their slow length along.

He annoys us, too, occasionally with false movements in lines of lesser dimensions. He trips even in his octosyllabics—

Or aught the polished bowed unto;
Served his weak spirit to entrance
A laughing, senseless, giddy crew
I pitied his unworthy belief.

Who can scan this last line, so as to make it read like verse? And what can be made of the following?—

That aspect with which he might greet.

Thus man doth boast Science's power.
To earn brighter, happier days
To harsh and stern servitude
His despicable, servile train
E'en dared to spurn the poor pe—dest—tri—an.

Tri-an, we suppose, must be pronounced tri—an.

Then hurried with a trusty pair
Unto the quarter where I knew
The child should be, I found it there,
But quick the shrill alarm flew.

Does our poet give the word alarm an Irish shake to make it sound like three syllables?

He seems to be partial to the shake in music. In Stanza LXXXI., page 51, there is another specimen of Irish intonation. World is made to rhyme with perilled.

Besides the tale of "Alvin of Erie," and a poem within that poem written in a different measure, and entitled, "Ira of Killarney, or the Intact; a tale of Guilt," there is a poem called "The Emigrant," and a number of miscellaneous pieces given under a distinct title-page in the same volume. The first poem is the story of a young man who, losing his wife on the banks of a lake in North America, is overwhelmed with sorrow, and his thoughts taking a religious turn he becomes a missionary. The poem is a narrative of the hero's own experiences, with the long interpolation of the story of "Ira." Both are tales of Byronic horror. Alvin's brother, Roderick, feeling himself made ugly by the daily beauty of Alvin's life, determines to murder him. It is a new edition of Cain and Abel. Roderick makes his diabolical attempt, but fails, and becomes a wanderer. Ira of Killarney, for his bad conduct, obtains his father's curse, and in revenge, at the head of a crew of pirates, he robs his parent and kidnaps his little innocent brother, whom he confines in a dungeon for fifteen years. We wish our author had studied Byron less or other poets more. He has acquired a taste for the horrors of guilt and the charnel house. Our only objection to his venturing upon a close imitation of or a competition with Byron in his famous storm in Don Juan is that it has an appearance of presumption and is a real failure. But we protest more seriously and earnestly against his adoption of Lord Byron's misanthropical philosophy. It is not true, as Mr. Langford writes, that

None represent the world more true
Than the small band which forms a pirate crew.

Mr. Langford attempts to justify the extravagance of his tale of "Ira" by a reference to a real character and an actual occurrence. But this is not a fair excuse. Neither painter nor poet should select monstrosities, or any strange exceptions to the general law of nature. The great artist, whether in poetry, or painting, or sculpture, copies general and not individual nature. The portrait of Othello is not that of an individual; it is the representation of our common nature under the influence of a powerful passion. We do not ask whether Claude's pictures literally represent some particular landscapes, but whether they illustrate or correspond with that general idea which rural scenery leaves upon the mind. So it is with the Medicean Venus. It would be ridiculous to conclude that it is impossible such a work could be true to nature, because it was not copied from an individual model. As the whole civilised world is enchanted with that matchless statue, it may be taken as a proof that its consistency with our notions of perfect female beauty is the cause of such universal admiration, and that these notions are in some way or other derived from nature, will hardly be disputed.

We arrive at truth through the medium of the imagination. If a painter were to represent things as they really are, he would represent them falsely. This is no paradox, though it may sound like one. He would throw aside, for instance, the illusions of perspective, and bring out distant objects as largely and distinctly as the nearest. All objects are represented by the imitative arts, not by rule and measurement—not as they really are—not even as they appear to the ignorant and the dull, but as they are seen by the intellectual and the imaginative, who have finer perceptions and are more observant.

Mr. Galt, in the preface to his story of "The Stolen Child," anticipates the objections of the critics to certain improbabilities, and exults in the reply that the story is founded on fact. If we understand him rightly, he also takes credit to himself for having studied individual and local, instead of general nature. But great artists are not such servile copyists. A study of individual models is the A B C of their profession. It prepares them for the study of general nature and for original combinations. A painter is no more required to stop at these models than to confine himself to separate limbs or features. The word invention, as applied to the imitative arts, implies no opposition to truth. Mr. Galt, painfully conscious of the improbabilities of his own story, took occasion to tell us "that when we hear a critic loquacious about the improbabilities of a tale, we may rely upon it that the said critic is a greenhorn!" This remark was every way unworthy of an author like Mr. Galt, and he was quite mistaken if he thought it would save him from criticism. He who is on his oath as a witness is at liberty to startle us with strange and particular truths opposed to our general opinions and experience, but the painter and the poet are bound to preserve an air of probability, or a certain degree of consistency, even in their most imaginative productions. A surveyor who has to report upon the height, length, and breadth of hills and valleys may surprise us with his literal truths, but the painter is to represent things not as they are, but as they appear. His aim is verisimilitude only. He is to preserve a truth of illusion. He is not to shock or perplex us with the odd freaks and accidents of nature. If he should take a fancy to a cloud precisely in the shape of an officer with a cocked hat and sword, bowing to an old woman with a kettle in her hand, and insert it in his landscape, we should laugh at his justification on the ground of truth, though he were to bring a hundred witnesses to prove that he had only represented an actual occurrence. Such a copy from nature would be unnatural. The painter in words is bound by the same rules as the painter in colours.

There is considerable force and spirit, but we have shown that there is also a want of care and judgment in our author's longer poems. Many of his shorter pieces are better finished, and are not less vigorous or poetical. From several of these we are led to expect that Mr. Langford may look back upon this work with something of the feeling with which Byron probably in after life regarded his "Hours of Idleness."

Whatever may be thought of Mr. Langford's poetry, and on this point people may be allowed to differ, we think there can be no question that he is a man of some sort of talent—and that, too, very far from a contemptible sort—though the world often jumps to the conclusion that because a versifier is not a true poet he can be good for nothing. But the bad poet may be a first-rate mathematician, a wide-minded statesman, or a profound philosopher. Newton thought all poetry pure nonsense. Bentham, though he had much the same opinion of it, caused his friends to laugh heartily at his own attempts at versification; and Burke, who considered it the highest of all learning, has shown by his own verses how a truly great man may be a very small poet. Mr. Langford seems to be not only an able man but a very industrious one. He has not confined his attention to English verse. In the volume before us he shows himself an Oriental scholar, and has given us some translations of English poems into Oordoo. A lithographic engraving, from a sketch of his own, faces his title-page, but the art of lithography has not arrived at much excellence in the Punjab, if we are to judge of it by this specimen.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

DELHI PRIZE MONEY.

Mr. MACEVOY asked the Secretary of State for India why the second instalment of the Delhi prize money had not been paid to the troops engaged in that service, and when they might expect payment.

Sir C. WOOD said the subject involved a good deal of anxiety in order to deal fairly with the claims of all parties. A portion of the prize money had been kept back to meet contingent claims, and a final distribution could not take place until these claims had been ascertained.

PETITIONS PRESENTED.—ARMY OFFICERS.

By Mr. MARCH, from Lieutenant-Colonel Baker, of the Indian army—complaining of certain grievances, and for inquiry.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES.

On the vote of £5,709,733 for the general staff and regimental pay, allowances, and charges,

General PEEL wished to put a question, which probably could be best answered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, namely, whether the capitation rate was a fixed payment from the Indian Government to the Treasury, or whether it is merely matter of account, in which the Indian Government had the power of setting off any claims they might have for services rendered to the Imperial Government? If that were so, then the House of Commons for years to come might know nothing of the actual amount expended. He recollected it was stated before the military organisation committee that there were at one time five open accounts with the Indian Government on account of Chinese and Persian wars.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the attention of the Government had been given to the public expediency, and almost necessity, of winding up the complicated pecuniary relations that had grown up between the Indian Government and the Government at home. Those accounts had now almost entirely disappeared. To a certain extent it might be said that these matters stood on the principle of a set-off. The principle on which they proceeded was that of paying at once any clear claim, and leaving any doubtful one for future settlement, and the result had been that there were now but few doubtful claims of any kind. He trusted when making his financial statement to be able to show that there were no outstanding claims of any importance.

General PEEL said he wished to know whether, if Indian troops were employed in China or elsewhere, they must be paid for out of the grant voted for army purposes, or whether they might be paid for by a set-off of claims on the part of the Indian Government against the Home Government. All he wanted was that the vote should be submitted to the House as it stood, and that the charge should not be transferred from one vote to another.

Sir G. C. LEWIS said the point raised by the right hon. gentleman was purely a technical one, and had no substance in it. No part of the capitation grant could be set off for any expenses voted in these estimates. The real security which was offered to this House was by voting the money; no security was offered merely by voting the men. It was always the practice to vote the number of men in order to fill up the blank in the Mutiny Act. It never was the custom to insert the total number of Indian troops, or troops subject to a different Mutiny Act. The most effectual security was given to the House in the fact that the estimates were laid before them, and that without their vote the money could not be obtained. If the Indian Government made a claim during the present year it would be paid out of the sum voted. If no claim was made the sum would lapse into the exchequer, and would have to be revoted next year. A portion of the expenditure for Indian purposes in the estimates of last year was underrated, but it had arisen from the fact that then for the first time the particular charges referred to appeared in the estimates, and there was therefore no certain data to follow in making the estimates. The total sum, however, voted last year would be sufficient to cover the entire expenditure, as the excess in some of the votes would cover the deficiency in the others. A supplemental vote would not, therefore, be necessary. Since last year twelve regiments had been transferred, which were not included in the capitation rate of last year. There had been an insufficiency in the sum taken under the head of furloughs. Very few furloughs had been allowed to officers during the mutiny—they had of course been granted with greater liberality since. The arrangement made with the Government of India with respect to the capitation rate was, upon the whole, found to work satisfactorily.

General PEEL believed that the twelve regiments alluded to were included in the returns of last year.

Mr. T. G. BARING said they were not included in the capitation rate. A comparison had been made in the returns between the strength of the army in the then past and coming financial years.

Mr. WILLIAMS said that the statement made by the right hon. and gallant gentleman (General Peel) had enabled the House to see the difference in the cost of the army at different periods. There was an excess in the estimates this year of £255,000, as compared with last year, while there was a diminution of 4,160 in the number of men, which, calculated at the rate of £100 a man, would represent a sum of £416,000. The real excess, therefore, was about £860,000. The number of men required for the present year, more than that included in the estimates by Lord Aberdeen's Government, was 45,000, whose extra pay amounted to £4,500,000. It was for the House to consider whether a reduction in the number of men ought not to be made.

General PEEL said he had not intended to convey to the House that each man in the British army cost the country £100. On a rough calculation he believed that £100 per man would about cover all our military expenditure.

Colonel SYKES thought that the Chancellor of the Exchequer deceived himself if he thought there would ever cease to be a fluctuating account between the Imperial Government and the Government of India, as long as the Indian troops were employed out of that country. That course ought not to be adopted without the consent of the House.

Sir G. C. LEWIS did not mean to convey the idea that any one of the votes was framed in excess to cover a prospective deficiency in another vote, but he said that there was always great difficulty in anything so fluctuating as our military expenditure over all parts of the world to frame an exact estimate and make the expenditure coincident with the sum voted by the committee. Therefore it was a convenient course, when there happened to be a surplus on any vote, to apply it to a vote where the expenditure was in excess, without coming to the House for an extra vote.

Mr. C. BERKELEY desired some further information respecting the apparent increase of £60,000 on the vote for the recruiting service over the sum voted last year.

Sir G. C. LEWIS said that it was necessitated by the increase of men required for India.

Lord R. CECIL said it had been stated that evening that our army cost the country £100 per man, that that was the tone of the debate on a former evening, and that if any reduction were to take place it must be in the reduction of the men. It was against that reduction of efficiency that he wished to advance a few figures, because it would be in his opinion a most dangerous system to pursue. For if this country should be hurried into a war, as it was in 1853 and 1854, the Government would have to send out more boys to die in the trenches. Instead of reducing the number of men he thought the committee and the Government might reduce the cost of them. Was that possible? Last night there was a considerable discussion on the cost of ships. Now, though he could not compare the cost of a private army with that of the right hon. gentleman [Sir G. C. Lewis: The volunteers], he could compare the cost of the English army with the armies of foreign countries. The British army cost £93. 15s. per man; the French, £34. 7s.; the Sardinian, £30; the Spanish, £28; the Portuguese, £28. 1s.; the German States, £18. 12s.; and the Danish, 12 guineas—(laughter). He found in the French Blue-book that the army of France was 400,000 men, and the cost £14,515,702, or in the proportion per man of £36. 5s. 10d., while the British was only 148,242 men, and the cost £13,157,000, or in the proportion of £88 per man. Lord R. Cecil added that what he laid stress upon was the non-combatant expenditure. He did not wish to reduce the pay, pension, or food of the soldier.

Sir G. C. Lewis said the noble lord, as he understood, rested his comparison on what he called the expenses of the non-combatants. Would he state the items?

Lord R. Cecil said he took out the pay and pensions, and his remarks applied to all the rest of the items.

The vote was then agreed to.

CLAIMS UPON OUDE.

Colonel FRENCH asked the Secretary for India whether the opinions of the law officers of the Crown had been obtained by him upon the claims of the representative of the late Captain R. Frith, or of any other of the claimants upon the late State of Oude; and, if so, whether he had any objection that copies of such opinions be laid upon the table of the House.

Sir C. Wood said his hon. friend must be aware that it was contrary to all practice to lay upon the table the opinions of the law officers upon any point upon which they had been consulted by the Government. He could say, however, that the decision which he had arrived at, and the steps which he had taken, as he had already announced to the House, were in conformity with the opinions of the law officers of the Crown.

RICHARD LOADER and Co., of 23 and 24, Pavement, Finsbury, London, Cabinet Manufacturers, Upholsterers, Carpet Warehousemen, and General House Furnishers, beg very respectfully to inform the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and Public in general, that they have recently made very extensive ALTERATIONS and ADDITIONS to their spacious SHOW ROOMS and MANUFACTURING PREMISES, which has enabled them very materially to increase their hitherto extensive stock, and rendered it practicable for the more prompt execution of the numerous orders consequent on their large and increasing business, and they take this opportunity of most respectfully soliciting a continuance of past favours, and kind recommendation of those to whom the house is favourably known, calling special attention to the very important fact that, regardless of distance, all goods are delivered CARRIAGE FREE.

R. L. and Co. invite all parties intending to furnish to supply themselves with their "Illustrated Furnishing Guide," containing about two hundred and fifty well-executed designs, which will be forwarded on application postage free.

January, 1863.

THE BEAUTIES of the EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patronesses that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARATIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes—fac simile of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugenie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty.—Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

CORYZINE.—This invaluable, non-sternutative POWDER, employed like Snuff, affords instantaneous relief in incipient cases of cold, Influenza or Coryza, the sense of suffocation with excessive secretion supervening, being in both cases effectually removed. To those subject to this distressing complaint it is confidently recommended as a sure remedy.

Sold in Boxes at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; post free, 1s. 3d. and 3s. 1d. in stamps, by MARSHALL and MELLIN, English and Foreign Chemists, 16, Tichborne-street, opposite the County Fire Office, Regent-street.

THE EAST INDIA IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.

NOTICE OF CALL.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in pursuance of a Resolution passed at a Meeting of the Board of Directors, held this day, the SHAREHOLDERS of this Company are REQUIRED to PAY at the Company's Offices, 27, Cannon-street, E.C., London, or at Messrs. Ransom, Bourverie, and Co.'s, the Bankers of the Company, No. 1, Pall-mall East, London, S.W., a CALL of £3 per Share (making £5 per Share paid), on or before the 15th day of April next, upon which sum of £3 per Share interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum will be paid from the day of payment; and that, if such Call be not so paid, the holders of Shares in default will be liable to be charged with interest upon the amount unpaid by them, and their Shares will be subject to forfeiture under the Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

23, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

CHILDREN'S WORM TABLETS

(KEATING'S).—The recently discovered unfailing remedy for Worm disorders in Children and Adults has now been concentrated in the form of a purely Vegetable Sweetmeat. The Tablet is eagerly taken by children, and one to three given once or twice a week will effect a safe and certain cure.

Prepared and sold in Tins of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C., and Retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

OBSERVE the words "KEATING'S WORM TABLETS" are engraven on the Government Stamp of each Tin, without which none are genuine.

DENTAL SURGERY, 9, GROSVENOR-STREET.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared India-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation. 9, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square; 14, Gay-street, Bath; and 10, Eldon-square, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alterative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness is inviolable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Ashley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Foote, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE OF QUINIDINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

EXTERNAL DISEASES.—Every description of ulceration, sore, wound, burn, and indolent ulcer, is at once arrested in its destructive progress by the early and judicious application of this healing Ointment, which substitutes healthy for unhealthy action. It soothes and cools all inflammatory affections of the skin, prevents their spreading, and ultimately leaves the surface sound. When the disease has been of long duration, Holloway's Pills should be taken while his Ointment is being used; they promote the cure by purifying the blood and regulating the circulation. The Ointment is an admirable auxiliary in subduing the many rashes and eruptions common to the nursery; there the timely use of these medicaments will ease many an aching heart.

KEATING'S PERSIAN INSECT POWDER.

UNRIVALLED in EXTERMINATING Mosquitoes, Fleas, Bugs, Flies, Beetles, Cockroaches, and every description of insect infesting Animals and Poultry, protects Clothes, &c., from Moths. ONLY INJURIOUS TO INSECT LIFE. See that the name of THOMAS KEATING, 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, is on every Packet.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAFTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nafel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 25th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Indian papers are almost as full of the particulars of something like Royal progress of the Viceroy of India through the North-Western Provinces as the English papers lately were with the details of the procession through London of the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Governor-general of India is really a greater man in his own vast locality than any of our princes at home, and the state and ceremony attendant upon his movements as far exceed in imposing splendour and magnificence the passage of the Prince of Wales through our metropolis, as Oriental tamashas generally surpass all Western displays on occasions of public pomp and jubilee. The crowded durbars almost realized some of the most gorgeous effects of Oriental fiction, and must have made Lord Elgin himself and all Europeans present conscious of the fact that there is still some romance left in our Indian empire, in spite of the example of the plain sense and utilitarian views and simple tastes and customs of British rulers and residents. The observed of all observers, the representative of British power in the East, was dressed in the simplest European style, while the throngs of Oriental princes that salaamed to him one after the other in quick succession glittered in the most costly and magnificent attire that India could supply. Elaborate kingcob, stiff with the precious metals, and rich velvets, and the finest cashmere cloths, scarlet and blue, with gold embroidery, and rainbow-coloured scarfs and shawls of fabulous prices, and gold brocade, and a dazzling profusion of diamonds, and pearls, and rubies, and sapphires, and magnificent turbans studded with emeralds and rubies, and glittering sword-sheaths crusted all over with gold and jewellery, made the scene of the Viceroy's Durbar remind the spectator of some of the most resplendent descriptions of courtly grandeur in the "Arabian Nights Entertainments." It must have seemed as if all the wealth and rank and grandeur of the East were brought together in honour of the Governor-general of India. The famous "Field of the Cloth of Gold," where English noblemen carried their fortunes on their backs, was here surpassed in the blaze of jewellery and the brilliancy of armour and attire.

Sir Charles Trevelyan has not yet declared his intentions respecting the Income-tax. He has grown cautious in his revelations to the public. He intends, it is said, to reduce the ad valorem duty on all imports, and to impose a duty of at least one anna on every package entered at the Custom-house. He also proposes a complete revision of the postal system of Bengal. Another scheme of his is the formation of a central printing office, where all official papers will be printed. Something of this sort was long ago suggested, we believe, by Mr. Jones, of the Bengal Office.

Mr. Harrington has been appointed Lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces.

The Nawab of Rampore is to succeed the late Maharajah of Puttiala as Member of Council of the Viceroy and Governor-general.

The Jyntea rebel chief has been captured and sentenced to death. He confessed that the cause of the rebellion was the odious Income-tax, and a fear that the British Government was about to interfere with the religion of our people.

We regret to learn that Mr. Yule, who had previously won so many golden opinions from his countrymen in India, following the example of his late predecessor, has humbled himself before the Nizam by taking off his shoes in the presence of that Royal puppet, and seating himself on the floor. Mr. Yule is the representative of British sovereignty at the Court of the Nizam, and if he has no care for his own personal dignity he ought to respect that of the Power for which he acts. When a native takes off his turban an Englishman should take off his shoe, but not before. If the Nizam would make a sacrifice of national custom Mr. Yule ought to do so too, but not otherwise.

The Government of India called on the local Governments for a report on the subject of a uniform currency note for all India, bearing on its face the value in written characters and numerals in three languages. The local Governments have expressed their opinion that the uniform note for all Indian might be issued bearing the value in numerals and written characters—one Hinduee, in the Deva Nagree; one Oordoo, in the Persian; and the third the principal vernacular in the circle.

The Government dockyard at Kidderpore is to be sold by auction. It is supposed to be worth ten lacs of rupees, or £100,000 sterling.

Sir William Mansfield reached Mhow on the termination of his official tour through Guzerat, Rajpootana, and Malwa, on the 18th of February. He was expected again at Bombay on or about the 10th of March. His Excellency Sir Hugh Rose met the Governor-General at Lucknow.

We notice in the home obituary the death of Mr. Arthur Easton, late of the India Board; also of Lieut.-general James Perry, an old Madras officer, and colonel of the 31st Madras Light Infantry, who was at home on furlough.

The office of the Telegraph to India Company at Madras being abolished, the public using the telegraph wires there have now to do so under an arrangement with the company's agents.

Our Bombay official gazette presents a list of judicial functionaries appointed in the original and appellate sides of the High Court of Bombay.

An Act, consolidating and amending the laws relating to the administration of the Department of Sea Customs in India, received the Vice-regal assent on the 29th of January. The Act repeals a host of old regulations for collecting the Customs. By rule VII of the amended regulations, new officers of Customs are to be appointed. Rule VII:—"The local Government of every presidency or place in which Duties of Sea Customs are levied, shall appoint such persons as it may deem proper to exercise the powers conferred, and to perform the duties imposed by this Act." By rule XI the Governor-general in Council may declare free ports.

The Bombay Government having, some time ago, decided on the abolition of the Golundauze Battalion, the Commander-in-Chief has intimated that, as the battalion is reduced to four companies, it will cease to exist as a battalion from the 1st of April next, from which date the command, the head-quarters' staff, and all establishments connected therewith will be abolished.

The separate command of the Artillery in the Sind Division of the Bombay Army, and the appointment of adjutant to the Artillery in Sind, will cease from the arrival of the 18th Brigade head-quarters at Kurrachee.

We have given the full particulars of the grand Vice-regal progress in another part of our paper, under the head of Bengal. It was a series of brilliant ovations. A more solemn ceremonial was attended to by Lord Elgin at the too famous well at Cawnpore. At his Excellency's command, the Bishop of Calcutta consecrated the memorial and the adjacent burial-ground in the presence of the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, and a large body of officers and civilians.

We did not notice the subject of the Royal Commission respecting the amalgamation of the army last week because we had reason to believe that such notice would have been somewhat premature. It is generally understood that the officers of the Indian army are now very desirous that all authentic and important information respecting the supposed infringement of the guarantee that they were not to suffer by the amalgamation arrangements, should reach the members of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the matter, whether that information should be conveyed officially and directly or through the columns of the press. Our own columns will be open to all communications upon the subject on either side of the question. We cannot but be anxious that the interests of so noble a service as that of the Indian army, which has done so much to support the name and fame of our country in the far East, should be duly respected by the British Government; and we are quite disposed to believe that it is neither the interest nor the wish of any high officials to withhold the recognition of their rights. Sir Charles Wood himself exhibits no unwillingness to act fairly; though he may not take the right view of the real claims of the service, but by referring the whole question to a Royal Commission, he has at least shown a disposition to let the question be fairly canvassed by men who cannot be suspected of any bias against the Indian officers. The army may now rest satisfied that their claims will be most thoroughly investigated. The Royal Commission, we understand, will consist of Lord Ellenborough, Earl Dalhousie, Lord Hotham, Joseph Henley, Esq., M.P., Lieut.-gen. Sir C. Yorke, G.C.B., Major-gen. A. Clarke, Major-gen. Sir P. M. Melville, K.C.B.

BENGAL.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL GRIFF.]

On Thursday morning, the 5th Feb., a special train of eight carriages left the Howrah station, conveying the Earl and Countess of Elgin and Lady Louisa Bruce, with their suite, so far as the East Indian Railway Company's line was opened—that is, to Benares, en route for the north-west, and finally to Simla, where the Viceroy intends to spend the ensuing cold season, and probably the next also, as he has obtained the sanction of the Home Government to his absence for eighteen months from the seat of Government. The destination of the party for the end of the day's journey was Jumalpoore, 297 miles from Calcutta, at which place it was intended to arrive at half-past six in the evening. The brilliant appearance of the train of new carriages, including a very beautifully fitted saloon carriage for the Viceroyal family, showed that the company were prepared to do full honour to his lordship's acceptance of their invitation to make a public occasion of the opening of the line, so far as the Holy City, occurring, as it did, so nearly at the time of his intended tour. At Burdwan, the Viceroy having alighted, the Maharajah of Burdwan was introduced to him, and after a few minutes of delay, caused by the change above alluded to, the train started again, with the assurance that the lost time would be made up in the run of thirty miles thence to Beddeah, or, at any rate, before reaching Synthesa. In their anxiety to do the thing in due Viceroyal conveyance style, the railway authorities had supplied the engines, and the coaling stations all along, with Kurhurbaree coal, as being of extra-superior-superfine-steam-generating quality; but they had overlooked the little fact that the said supplies had been lying exposed to deteriorating atmospheric influences for some two years, more or less, at Howrah. So it was in vain that the stokers fed the fires to repletion; the more they burned the less steam they got; station after station the time got worse and worse, and the travellers, whether Viceroyal or of more common clay, the more impatient. But meanwhile Nulhates was reached by the way, and here the Viceroy stopped to inspect Mr. Wilson's experimental light railway running from this station to Moorsheadabad. At the Kurenmassa, with its fine bridge, the model of the magnificent bridge over the Soane. The Soane Bridge is a magnificent assertion of British energy and power, and the universal stretch of science, as it spans the great river only now brought within the bounds of modern civilization. The train ran over its vast length and stopped beyond, where the Viceroy and the whole party descended and spent a half hour of wonder and admiration at the strength and noble simplicity of the grand structure stretching upon twenty-nine arches, of one hundred and fifty feet span, or one thousand four hundred and fifty yards at a great elevation, rendered necessary by the enormous rise of the torrents in the river during the rainy season. No one who has seen it can ever forget the impression created by the wonderful combination of strength with lightness, over whose fairy-looking lattice-girder structure the ponderous train glides with an effect indescribable by the spectator. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal reminded us that he had joined the train by being left behind under the bridge in a praiseworthy pursuit of knowledge; as usual, "wanting to know you know." Both the Viceroy and Mr. Beadon had a long conversation with Mr. Turnbull and the railway officials respecting the works in which both showed the deepest interest. Having thus remembered the Lieutenant-Governor, it is as well to remember that when the train arrived at Dinapore there was a great display of troops and more tiffin. Having passed the Soane and looked out at the windows, our "griff" has ceased from henceforth to wonder at the shortcomings of the electric telegraph, and absolves Colonel Douglas as being only a mortal man, expected by the Government to achieve physical impossibilities. Looking at the enormous expenditure on the department, and the time it has existed, it is hard to believe that for hundreds of miles the "line of telegraph" between Bombay and Calcutta is represented by a single wire running over the tops of rough and rotting poles, with neither insulators nor other fittings or expedients, in a state excusable only as a temporary expedient for a contractor's purposes along a line in construction; disgraceful to the Government responsible for telegraphic communications, heartbreaking for the men who are expected to work it, and irritating and mischievous to the commercial and trading public. All day the train had been "beating old Time," and arrived, after a splendid run over one of the best laid new lines it has been our good fortune to run along, half an hour before the appointed time. The consequence was that no one was prepared for the reception. The police were ready, however, and formed a guard, and the troops, consisting of H.M.'s 20th and an escort of the Queen's Bays, arrived just in time to be too late, whilst a magnificent procession, intended by the Rajah of Benares to meet the Viceroy, had to be stopped on the far side of the bridge. And so the East Indian Railway Company, having brought his Excellency safely and pleasantly over 540 miles of a really excellent and well ordered line, so far as construction is concerned, proceeded to entertain him upon the occasion.

Benares was alive in good time on the Saturday morning with crowds of enormous elephants and countless mobs of camels and motley spearmen and sowers in every variety of tawdry uniform, no two of them according in anything except the common and all-pervading ground of dirt. At eleven o'clock his Excellency held a levee at the Commissioner's house, at which all the civilians of the station and visitors were presented by the Governor-general's agent, Mr. Shakespeare, and the military by General Campbell. This was followed at noon by a private durbar, at which the Rajah of Benares was received. Then at one o'clock came the great durbar, which pressure of time to catch the express train for Calcutta prevents our attempting to describe. In an enormous tent was placed the Viceroy's chair of state, flanked by the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal on his left and the Foreign Secretary, Col. Durand, on his right, the Governor of the North-west Provinces being absent from Benares. In a great semicircle to the right were the native nobles and gentry headed by the Rajah of Benares, as the local chief, and the Maharajah of Vizianagram who is here on a pilgrimage, as the leader of the natives not of the Benares district. The gorgeous dresses of these chiefs contrasted well with the opposite semicircle of European officers and civilians, and beyond all were the fair faces which lend grace and add a charm to all assemblages where Europeans take the lead; and when, on the entrance of Lord Elgin, the whole glittering mass rose to receive him, no word-painting could convey the wonderful effects presented in the enormous durbar tent. The royal salute having ceased, his Excellency, having taken his seat, addressed the native gentlemen as follows:—

"It affords me much satisfaction to find myself surrounded here by so many native gentlemen of high character and influence, gentlemen who in times of confusion and trouble, gave proof of their loyalty and fidelity to the British Crown. I welcome more especially the Maharajah of Benares, and I beg to assure him that if I omit to return his visit to-day I shall do so because the multiplicity of my engagements prevents me from carrying my intention into effect. I welcome also the Maharajah of Vizianagram, who, although he be a visitor here, occupies a high position and enjoys deservedly a high reputation in the part of India where he resides. I welcome, too, the Maharajahs of Doornan and Bettia, who have come to this place from the district of Patna, which is under the able administration of my esteemed friend, the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal; and I welcome generally the Rajahs and gentlemen who have come here from the districts of Benares, Patna, and, I believe, Goruckpore and Allahabad. I have, moreover, a special word of welcome for the son of my trusty councillor, Rajah Deonarain Singh. The Rajah offered to accompany me from Calcutta to this place in order to be present at this durbar—but I declined to accept his offer, because I wished him to remain with my Council while it is engaged in the work of legislation. It is the desire of her Majesty the Queen that the native gentlemen of India should be represented in the council of the Governor-general, in order that, when laws are made for India, their opinions, and wishes, and feelings may receive due consideration. It is my intention and duty to do everything in my power to give effect to her Majesty's gracious intention in this respect. Among the rajahs and gentlemen here to-day are many who have large estates in the neighbourhood and along the line of railway which we travelled over yesterday. The value of those estates will be greatly enhanced by the completion of the important work of which we are about to-day to celebrate the opening. I need hardly remind them that they will owe this advantage to the introduction of British engineering skill and British capital into this country. I trust that the consideration of this fact, and of similar facts which are of daily occurrence, will tend to produce a kindly feeling between the races, by showing them to what an extent they may be mutually useful to each other. Meanwhile, I hope that the gentlemen whom I am addressing will turn these advantages to account, by doing their utmost to improve their properties and to promote the happiness and welfare of their ryots and dependents."

The Foreign Secretary having repeated in the native tongue the substance of the Viceroy's address, those who were entitled to presentation were introduced to his Excellency, according to their rank, by the Foreign and Assistant Secretaries, and by the Commissioners.

The customary nuzzers having been presented, uttar and pan were distributed, and his Excellency retiring ended the ceremony, and the assembly dispersed. The European portion of them, excepting the ladies, met again to close the busy day, at seven in the evening, at the Assembly Rooms, where was spread

THE DINNER.

Considering that the caterer, Mr. Kellner, had but five days' notice, the dinner, for about 120 guests, did great credit to the commissariat resources of the district, aided by facilities of transport which brought up lumps of Wenham Lake ice to cool the punch and other refreshing liquids. Lord Elgin was supported on either side by Mr. Turnbull, the chief engineer, and Mr. Palmer, the agent of the East India Railway Company, and with them were seated the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, General Campbell, commanding the Benares Division, Mr. Shakespeare, representing the Lieutenant-governor of the North-West, the Rajah of Benares, and Mr. Sibley, one of the executive engineers of the company. The chairman, Mr. Palmer, having proposed the usual loyal toasts, which were musically taken up in most oppressively prompt style by the energetic band of H.M.'s 20th, which was in attendance, said:—

"I now propose the health of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-general of India, who, I trust, will allow us to thank him for the honour he has done us in taking part in the proceedings of to-day. His presence here to-night is not only a mark of the interest which he takes in the progress of the East Indian Railway, but also one, amongst many proofs, that he is ready to afford every encouragement and incentive to all of us engaged in its construction.

"The officers of the East Indian Railway have constantly endeavoured to deserve the approval of his Lordship's government, as well as to merit the confidence of the directors of the company, and we cannot but regard the presence of his Excellency here to-day as a signification that the labours of the company's servants have met with his approval.

"In the name of the directors and servants of the East Indian Railway Company, I beg to thank his Lordship for the honour he has done us, and I propose this toast—"The health of H.E. the Viceroy and Governor-general of India."

After thanking the company for the honour which they had done him in drinking his health, his Excellency proceeded to say: In observing that my presence here to-day is a proof of the interest I feel in the progress of the East Indian Railway, and of my appreciation of the service which those who have been engaged in carrying it out have conferred upon India, Mr. Palmer interprets correctly the motives which have brought me here to-night. But I may also remark, that in acquiescing in the proposal that I should attend this festival, I am following the example set me by my two immediate predecessors—Lord Dalhousie and Canning. Lord Dalhousie was present in 1854, at the departure of the first train from Howrah to Burdwan, and he would have attended at the dinner given on that occasion if his medical advisers had not peremptorily refused to allow him to make the attempt. Lord Canning was present at Rajmahal at the railway celebration of 1860, and took a prominent part in the proceedings. In looking over the published report of these proceedings, a few days ago, my attention was arrested by an incident which brought forcibly home to my mind one painful circumstance, in which my position here to-day contrasts sadly with that which he then occupied. At a stage in the proceedings of the evening corresponding to that at which we have now arrived, Lord Canning departed from the routine prescribed by the programme, and invited the company to join him in drinking the health of his noble predecessor, the Marquis of Dalhousie, who had, as he justly observed, nursed the East Indian Railway in its infancy, and guided it through its first difficulties. It is not in my power to make any similar proposal to you now. A mysterious dispensation of Providence has removed from this world's stage, where they seemed destined to play so noble and useful a part, both the proposer of this toast and its object. The names of both are written in brilliant characters in some of the most eventful pages of the history of India, and both were removed at a time when expectation, as to the services which they might still render to India, was at its height. I shall not now dwell on the great national loss which we have all sustained in this dispensation, but perhaps I may be permitted to say, that to me the loss is not only a public one, but a private and personal calamity likewise; both of these distinguished men were my contemporaries, both, I believe, I may without presumption say, were my intimate friends. It is a singular coincidence that three successive Governors-general of India should have stood towards each other in this relationship of age and intimacy. One consequence is, that the burden of governing India has devolved upon us respectively at different periods of our lives. Lord Dalhousie, when named to the Government of India, was, I believe, the youngest man who had ever been appointed to a situation of such high responsibility and trust; Lord Canning was in the prime of life; and I, if I am not already on the decline, am at least nearer to the verge of it than either of my contemporaries who have preceded me. Indeed, when I was leaving England for India, Lord Ellenborough, who is now, alas! the only surviving ex-Governor-general of India, said to me, "You are not a very old man, but depend upon it you will find yourself by far the oldest man in India;" so that, if I have no other claim to your consideration, I have at least that which rests on the somewhat questionable plea of seniority. And now, gentlemen, having said so much on matters personal to myself, in return for the honour you have done me in drinking my health, I proceed to address you on the subject of the toast—"Success and prosperity to the East Indian Railway," which has been entrusted to me, and to which I invite you, with every confidence that you will respond heartily to the appeal to do all honour. I have already adverted to the part which Lord Canning took at the railway festival held at Rajmahal in 1860. On that occasion Lord Canning dwelt with much force and eloquence on the general advantages which the introduction of railways promised to confer upon India, on the vast commercial benefits which would result from the establishment of a cheap and rapid means of transport from the producing districts of the interior to that mysterious element known to its inhabitants under the title of the blackwater, to the civilising influences which facilities of intercourse would bring to bear on semi-barbarous tribes hitherto practically inaccessible, on the advantages which European health and energy would derive from means of communication which would bring the hill stations and sultry plains into closer proximity to each other. What Lord Canning said on these points was so conclusive and so well stated, that I need not go over the same ground again. I shall therefore confine myself on this occasion to a few practical remarks upon what has been already done towards the realisation of these benefits for India, and upon what we have now to do if we would hasten the arrival of the period when those benefits should be realised to the full. And, in the first place, I must beg leave to say that I think it was a most fortunate circumstance for India that her railway system was inaugurated under the auspices of a Governor-general, who had devoted to the subject of railways a greater amount of thought and study than any other living statesman. Many people think that it would have been an advantage for England if Lord Dalhousie's views respecting the conditions under which a national system of railways ought to be established had been adopted in that country. And, at any rate, it is certain that if this had been the case a vast amount of capital which has been sacrificed in Parliamentary and other contests would have been saved. But, however, it may be as to England, where we are in the habit of entrusting all such matters to private enterprise exclusively, there can be no doubt, I think, that the principles upon which he acted were sound as applied to India, where the intervention of the State was imperatively necessary, and where private enterprise alone neither would nor could have undertaken, with any prospect of success, the work which at the outset had to be done. In laying out, therefore, certain main lines of railway under the authority of Government, and providing for their construction by means of capital raised under the protection of a Government guarantee, Lord Dalhousie adopted, in my opinion, a judicious and statesmanlike policy; and looking back from the point at which we have now arrived, I think we may say with confidence that this policy has been justified by the result. We have now in operation in India some 2,400 miles of railway, of which upwards of 900 miles belong to the East Indian Railway system. Some 2,000 miles still remain to be constructed under Government guarantees already granted; so that, when these lines shall have been completed, India will possess some 4,500 miles of railway constructed under this system. All these lines are first class lines, in the construction of which efficiency and perfection have been more considered than cost. Many of the works upon them are monuments of British engineering skill, and of the power and beneficent application of British capital which will endure for all ages. We saw some of the most remarkable of these works in the course of our journey from Calcutta to this place. I may mention as the most conspicuous of them the iron latticed bridges over the Soane, and other great rivers which we crossed upon the route, and other subsidiary works not so visible to the ordinary traveller, but not less conclusive proofs of the great engineering skill which has been employed in the great undertakings that have been made necessary by the inundations to which much of the country traversed is subject. I believe that the bridge over the Soane is longer than any bridge in the world except the Victoria bridge over the St. Lawrence at Montreal, of which I laid the foundation-stone some ten years ago. In the case of the Victoria bridge the difficulty which we had to encounter, and the engineering problem which we had to resolve, was to prevent damage from the huge masses of ice which come down the St. Lawrence during the spring. But I believe that water is a more formidable adversary to cope with in the liquid than in the solid form. And I believe, therefore, that the casualties against which Mr. Turnbull and those acting under him have had to provide were the more serious of the two. I observe from the list of toasts, that my hon. friend the Lieut. governor of Bengal is about to propose during the course of the evening the health of the chief engineers and their staffs. He will, no doubt, do justice to their merits, and I shall not, therefore, anticipate what he may have to say by detailing their claims on the consideration of Government and of all who are interested in the progress of India. But as Mr. Turnbull is about to take his departure immediately for England, I cannot help congratulating him on the successful point at which we have now arrived in the progress of the great work which he has superintended from the commencement, and which owes so much to the unremitting attention and great ability with which he has guided and directed it. If I do not particularise the names of other gentlemen who have rendered essential service in promoting the interests of this railway, and of the public as connected with it, it will be understood that I omit to do so for the reason that I have already assigned. But, gentlemen, however interesting it may be to refer to the past, and to dwell upon the present, the most important questions which we have to answer relate to the future, and the most important of all in my opinion is this:—To what agency are we henceforward to look, if we would desire to extend as widely as possible to all parts of India the benefit of this potent instrument of modern civilization? I have no hesitation in affirming at once in answer to this question that we must not look to an indefinite extension of a system of Government guarantees for the accomplishment of this object. In the first place, it would be wholly unjustifiable for any one object, however important, to place such a strain upon our finances as this policy would involve. In the second place, however justifiable and necessary a system of Government guarantees may be in certain circumstances, it is essentially an expensive one, because, by securing to shareholders a minimum rate of interest on their capital, it weakens in them the motives to economy, and because, by dividing the responsibility for expenditure between Government and railway officials, it diminishes in the latter the sense of responsibility. If I were not desirous to avoid on such an occasion as this all disagreeable topics, I might perhaps quote from our own experience some proofs of the truth of these positions. Moreover, the indefinite extension of a system of Government guarantees is wholly incompatible with the endeavour to bring private enterprise largely into play for the execution of these works. While there is an unlimited call for capital for works enjoying the protection of a Government guarantee, it is not to be expected that capital will be forthcoming to any extent for similar works which have not that protection. For the accomplishment, therefore, of the great object to which I am referring, we must henceforward, I apprehend, look to private enterprise, not perhaps to private enterprise wholly unaided by the State, but, at any rate, to private enterprise not protected by Government guarantee; but if so, what are the conditions which will entitle railway enterprises of this class to the countenance and encouragement of the Government? I lay it down as a fundamental principle that we ought to look to the eventual establishment of one uniform railway gauge for the whole of India. The experience of England is conclusive as to the inconvenience of a double or conflicting railway gauge. After the expenditure of an untold amount of money in Parliamentary conflicts, the broad gauge of England has been compelled to take the narrow gauge on its back, and the whole capital expended upon the former may be said to have been thrown away. But what does this resolution in favour of a uniform gauge imply? It will, I think, be admitted that the main object of a uniform railway gauge is to enable the several railway lines to exchange their plant in order to avoid transhipment of freight; but if the plant of the subsidiary lines be transported along the main lines it must be sufficiently well finished to be fitted to travel in safety at high speed; and if the plant of the main lines is to travel along the subsidiary lines the latter must have rails sufficiently heavy, and works of construction sufficiently substantial to support it. Moreover, where streams or rivers are encountered they must be bridged. In short, the subsidiary lines must be built in a manner which would make them nearly as expensive as the main lines. In other words, railways must not be introduced into any part of India where we cannot afford to spend from £10,000 to £15,000 a mile upon them. I am not prepared to accept this conclusion. I have been a good deal in America, and I know that our practical cousins there do not refuse to avail themselves of advantages within their reach by grasping at those which are beyond it. In 1854 I travelled by railway from New York to Washington; we had several ferries to cross on the way, but we found that the railway with the ferries was much better than no railway at all—in short, in America, where they cannot get a pukka railway, they take a cutcha one instead. This, I think, is what we must do in India. There are many districts where railways, costing from £3,000 to £4,000 a mile, might be introduced with advantage, although they would not justify an expenditure of from £10,000 to £15,000 a mile. We have only to be careful that cutcha lines are not mistaken for pukka ones, that they are not allowed to set up a rival system as against the main lines, or to occupy ground which should be appropriated by the latter. I have detained you too long, I fear, by these details, but I conclude by requesting you to join me in drinking "Success and prosperity to the East Indian Railway."

Mr. Palmer, in rising to reply, said—

"My Lord and Gentlemen,—I wish that the duty of returning thanks for the toast which you have drunk had fallen to the lot of some one who could do more complete justice than I can to a great theme, of one who could speak long and well on the subject of the East Indian Railway. It is not without much experience of the working of the East Indian Railway that we have this day the pleasure to contemplate the opening of 240 additional miles of it. The railway from Calcutta to the North-west Provinces—upwards of 1,000 miles in its whole length—has, as you all well know, been opened portion by portion; and more than eight years have elapsed since the first length of twenty-four miles was opened for traffic in Bengal. In several successive stages of completion the railway has been worked, and at each step the results have more than realised the well-founded expectations of those interested in its progress. As a short and merely local line the railway was a complete success."

On Monday morning early, the Viceroy left Benares, and reached Allahabad in something under eight hours, traversing a flat rich country, covered with promising crops, visible occasionally through the awful clouds of the pervading medium of vision in the North-west; to wit—dust. Here his Excellency was received and entertained by the Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. P., and in the afternoon drove out and inspected the site of the new Civil Station, the excellent roads and approaches to which mark out already what will be one of the finest stations in India. Returning, his Excellency met Mr. Gower's traction engine and carriage, intended to work on the road between Cawnpore and Lucknow, conveying the mails and replacing the Government bullock trains. His Lordship not only closely inspected, but took a short ride upon the engine, which is a very handy travelling engine, running on a single guide, which is in front, easily worked by the driver with levers, and a pair of carrying wheels, driven direct by gearing from the engine in the centre; it has a pair of vertical tubular boilers, and with water and fuel weighs some six tons, with about eighteen-horse effective power. It ran at about nine miles an hour, and when your correspondent had been whisked round three or four corners at right angles at such a rate, finishing with not carrying away a strong but narrow gateway—only a shave—he got out with extreme satisfaction, and had so much trouble in getting his straight-on-end hair smoothed down again that there is no chance of his giving you the results of any more practical experiments with traction engines.

The engine is, however, doubtless a good one, the work of a hard-headed, practical and self-made man, such as are always found in the van of our colonial enterprises. On Tuesday morning his Excellency was out betimes, and drove through the Fort and thence to that wonderful and beautiful work the rapidly-progressing bridge over the Jumna, our notes upon which we must reserve, like those respecting the Soane bridge, till time shall permit us to give them more fully. The engineering world has few more striking evidences of British science, skill, and energy than these two great works. Lord Elgin went steadily over the whole of the works, inquiring into their minutest details, and by his warm interest and long inspection gave the best possible evidence of his appreciation of the work which the able engineer himself, Mr. Sibley, was conducting him over. After some hour and a-half of inspection, his lordship, having expressed to the engineer his high gratification, returned to his quarters, where at eleven o'clock he held a levee, which was attended by all the Europeans, civil and military, resident at the station, or who had come in to meet his Excellency, amongst which latter was General Lawrence, from Rajpootana, and Captain Impey, from Ulwar. At one o'clock a special train was ready, and under the usual saluting and display of red cloth, evergreens, and loyalty, the Viceroy departed, and progressed through increasing barrenness and desolation until he reached the end of his day's travel at that most God-forgotten and desolate-looking of stations, "Cawnpore the accursed." As the train ran through the wastes of saltpetre-land there were pointed out the scenes of Havelock's fights, the remnants of Wheeler's entrenchments, the house to which the unhappy victims entrapped in the boats had been brought up and secured till the hour of slaughter; and the lightest hearted of the travellers stepped with grave thoughts and unwilling foot upon the soil from whose polluted surface the blood of English women and children seems still to cry to Heaven unappeased. The Viceregal family found hospitable entertainment at the house of Mr. Lance, the Judge of Cawnpore. But the less said about a place so abhorrent in the yet recent remembrances connected with the scene the better. On Wednesday afternoon the few Europeans in the station collected at five o'clock in the Memorial Garden and Monument, the consecration of which was the occasion of his lordship's stay in the place. None who had seen the spot after the subsidence of the mutiny could recognise in the beautiful, well-planned, and well-kept garden, with its two graveyards and the beautiful central monument on its grassy mound, the site of the horrid slaughter-house which then stood in blood-stained ruin about the well, choked with the victims of the foulest treachery the world has ever seen. The two regiments stationed here and the artillery were on the ground, where in rapid succession arrived the Bishop of Calcutta and his attendant clergy, the teachers of peace and good-will among a generation heedless of their teachings, at least on this spot; then the Commander-in-Chief, Sir H. Rose, and his staff—men who had sternly taught a lesson not so easily to be evaded, and the memory of which speaks as yet more effectually than the Bishop; then the Viceroy, whose high task it is to combine the moral teaching with such demonstrations of the unmistakable eloquence of the secular arm, so that the murderous episode of Cawnpore may occur no more in the hitherto blood-stained pages of Indian history. The ceremonial was as simple as it well could be, and few ceremonies could be more impressive. No European who witnessed it will lightly forget it. The Viceroy advanced to the top of the steps of the memorial, and through the commissioner formally requested the bishop to consecrate that spot and the adjacent burial-places. The bishop, taking his place, then headed a procession of the clergy and the people present, and proceeded round the two burial-places and the interior of the memorial itself, with music playing and soldiers chanting the 49th, 116th, 139th, and 23rd Psalms; after which his chaplain read the form of consecration, which was signed by the bishop; and the 90th Psalm having been sung, he shortly addressed those present in most feeling, manly, and impressive terms befitting the occasion, and the ceremonial concluded with prayers read by the chaplain of the station, closing with the benediction by the bishop. Setting aside the question of the advisability of thus perpetuating the memory of a monstrous and perfidious slaughter, there can be no question as to the beauty and fitness of the memorial as a work of art. It is an octagonal stone screen surmounting a large mound raised about the well which was the grave of the murdered and the still breathing victims of the raging and defeated natives headed by the Nana. Around the interior of the screen runs a broad stone gallery, and in the centre is a circular pedestal intended to support the statue by Baron Marochetti, promised by the late Lord Canning—a promise which, it is to be hoped, will be held sacred by the fortunate inheritor of his Lordship's wealth. The screen and the whole work is worthy to enshrine the best example of the highest art that England can afford. For once a modern work of English architectural sculpture makes the beholder feel as he does in the presence of some of those old religious fanes whose builders in their intense faith built, as it were, the expression of their souls in the work of their hands; and for the same reason Mr. Thornhill, whose work this is, has built his heart and the expression of his brotherly love for him who is beneath into this memorial, and it needed no consecration to make it sacred to every English heart who looks upon its beauty after reading the inscription upon the tomb hard by. As for the natives, they looked on furtively at the Christians doing poojah to the manes of their dead, which is the only construction they could put upon the white surplices and military music in solemn procession around the graves. The stone work is exquisitely carved upon stone of exceedingly fine quality brought from Allahabad; and the work, which was commenced only on the 11th November last, testifies to the earnestness with which it was set about, and does the highest credit to the native workmen, employed in cutting it under Mr. Thornhill's direction. At half-past nine o'clock, under the due escort and salute, the Viceroy started again "special" for Agra, through a country showing more fertile as he advanced and promising far beyond an average harvest, which is now the case throughout the North-West, thanks to the rain-fall which providentially came just as people began to think that failure was certain. Arrived at the station, his Excellency was received by a splendid escort to accompany him across the bridge and past the fort of Agra to his encampment, some two miles off. Just at the bridge the horse on which his lordship was mounted, either bitten by some insect or otherwise alarmed, commenced kicking so furiously that his rider was fain to dismount and take another steed. As the splendid cortège wound up over the bridge and past the fort under thundering salutes, nothing could be more splendid. The show of some four to five thousand troops of all arms, the rich dresses of the natives, and the many-hued crowd of spectators made a most striking coup d'œil, and the whole arrangements were most excellent, and elicited the expression of Lord Elgin's entire gratification. This morning the Viceroy held a levée, which was very numerously attended; and this evening the Brigadier commanding, the Commissioner, General Lawrence, and some of the military and civil superiors dine with his lordship; to-morrow (Saturday) he receives the private visits of some nineteen of the native chiefs, and on Tuesday next, the 17th, comes the grand durbar, for which great preparations are being made, and regarding which, and the wonders of this celebrated city, "your Griff" proposes to say something in due time.—Englishman, Feb. 19.

THE CONSECRATION OF THE MEMORIAL WELL AT CAWNPORE.

This most solemn and impressive ceremonial came off on Wednesday evening, the 11th Feb. A little before the appointed hour a very large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled at the well, a goodly portion of them being visitors from Lucknow. The Lord Bishop, the Archdeacon, the Chaplains of Lucknow and Cawnpore, and five or six other clergymen, in full canonicals, were also there, awaiting with Mr. Thornhill, Commissioner of Allahabad, Mr. Wingfield, c.s., Chief Commissioner of Oudh, and General Macduff, c.s., commanding the Oudh Division of the army; the arrival of the Viceroy, H.M.'s 46th regiment, and a detachment of the Queen's Bays, were drawn up on three sides of the well, with the band fronting its southern face, the side of the entrance into it. Presently he Commander-in-chief drove up, accompanied by Colonel Sarel, Military Secretary, and the Hon. Major Hamilton, and Captain Burne, Aides-de-camp, and was received with military honours. Shortly afterwards, the carriage containing the Viceroy and Countess of Elgin, and Lady Louisa Bruce, arrived. The troops presented arms, the band struck up "God Save the Queen," and Sir Hugh Rose and Bishop Cotton advanced a few paces to meet their Excellencies. The ladies were conducted to seats, while Lord Elgin planted himself, like a statue, on the upper pavement of the well, near the entrance, with the Lord Bishop on his right, and the clergy and the company ranged on either side. Here his Excellency was seen to the greatest advantage by the hundreds with whom he must erewhile have been a subject of extreme curiosity; and we cannot but believe that his venerable appearance, and the peculiarly benign aspect of his countenance, must have very favourably impressed the beholders as they gazed upon him for the first time. The absence of the lieutenant-governor, Mr. Edmonstone, was assigned to an unusual pressure of work, which detained him at Allahabad. All being now as silent as the grave, Mr. Thornhill read aloud the following

MEMORIAL.

To the Right Reverend Father in God George Edward, by Divine permission Bishop of Calcutta and Metropolitan in India and the Island of Ceylon.

The memorial of the Right Honourable James, Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, Viceroy and Governor-general of India, on the part of himself and the Christian subjects of her Majesty Queen Victoria,— SHOWETH,—That the present memorial building, erected over the well into which were cast the remains of a great company of Christian people, cruelly put to death near this place, on the fifteenth day of July, in the year of our Lord and Saviour one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven, together with two enclosures containing the graves of soldiers who died in the same year, the one situated at the distance of sixty yards to the south-west of the said memorial building, containing a little more than half an acre of ground, and the other situated at the distance of forty-five yards to the south-east of the memorial building aforesaid, have not been consecrated.

Wherefore, it is desired that your Lordship should now, by virtue of your pastoral and episcopal office, assign and consecrate the said Memorial building, and the said enclosed burial places, and separate them from all profane and common uses.

ELGIN AND KINCARDINE.

The Bishop then having signified his readiness to consecrate, the band was brought forward, and, chanting verses from Psalms xlix., cxv., cxxxiv., and xxiii., together with the clergy, headed by the Bishop, and followed by the Viceroy, the Commander-in-Chief, Mr. Wingfield, General Macduff, Mr. Thornhill, and others, marched round the two enclosures, situated on either side of the well. Having done this and returned to the well, the Bishop uttered the subjoined prayer:—

"The Glorious Majesty of the Lord our God be upon us. Prosper Thou the work of our hands upon us; O prosper Thou our handy work."

After this the Rev. H. Burn, chaplain to the Bishop, read aloud the following Sentence of Consecration:—

"In the name of God, Amen.

"We, George Edward, by Divine permission, Bishop of Calcutta and Metropolitan in India and the Island of Ceylon, do, in accordance with the foregoing memorial, decree this memorial building and these enclosed burial places as the same one therein described, to be separated from all common and profane uses, and do, by our ordinary and episcopal authority, assign and consecrate them according to the laws and usages of the United Church of England and Ireland, and we declare that the same shall for ever hereafter continue so assigned and consecrated, giving always and in all things to ourselves and our successors, Bishops of Calcutta, all ordinary and episcopal jurisdiction, rights, and privileges.

"In testimony whereof we caused our episcopal seal to be affixed thereto, and do sign these presents, this eleventh day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and in the fifth year of our consecration."

The Bishop, having signed the above, the Te Deum was sung. After which, his lordship delivered, extempore, a most eloquent and impressive address, speaking as nearly as possible to the following effect:—

"We are assembled, my brethren, on an occasion of national as well as of religious interest, to perform a duty which lies very close to our hearts, both as Englishmen and as Christians. Many of us have been present before this at the consecration of a cemetery, but none of us have ever taken part in that service under such solemn circumstances as to-day. We all feel that this is no ordinary burial place; but that we stand on a spot which must ever be regarded with reverence by all generations of our countrymen. Nor has its interest already faded into the past: it reminds us of a quite recent sorrow, which, while it struck a pang to the very heart of the whole nation, still awakens in some among us the sense of a nearer and more personal grief. We must not pass away from such a service as this with a transient emotion, nor with the mere thought that we have taken part in a stately ceremony, and find our last tribute to the memory of those whom an empire has deeply mourned, and still delights to honour: but we should seek to retain from it some convictions which may avail for the improvement of our lives. It is customary, at this part of the consecration service, for the person officiating to address to those assembled a few words of exhortation. You will bear with me, then, brethren, while I seek to draw from the past some plain and obvious lessons for the present and the future.

"Now, one thought which has probably occurred to some of us is the contrast of our present security and happiness with the agony, the horror, the terrific suffering, both of mind and body, of which this city was the scene little more than five years ago. The ground, which was then defiled with blood, has become a garden full of peace and beauty; the well into which the dying and the dead were cast stands adorned with the grace of art, and is dedicated to their memory by the simple but most suggestive words—These are they which came out of great tribulation. Where our country women were ruthlessly slain with none to help or deliver them, we now meet under the shadow of the great English monarchy, to offer up our prayers and praises to God through Christ. But this freedom from all apparent dangers, this full consciousness of strength, must not make us proud, or careless, or selfish; it should only quicken our sense of duty and responsibility. We should try to realise our debt to our Heavenly Father who has delivered us from such deadly peril, and given us so richly all things to enjoy; and, as our gratitude to God is best proved by loving-kindness to men, we should remember what we owe for His sake to this land in which our lot is cast. It has been often said that the tragedy of Cawnpore shows into what depths of wickedness human nature may sink when no Heavenly light is its guide. Let the restoration of a Christian rule show to what heights of wisdom and holiness human nature may ascend when illuminated by the true Light of the world. Let ours be a reign of mercy and righteousness. Under our power let all that is good and noble be strengthened and developed; let the example and influence of every Englishman in India be such as to preach Jesus Christ by the persuasive arguments of a pure and unselfish life. Let each of us in his dealings with those around him take as his motto that golden rule, which may be called the very cardinal principle of the Gospel, 'to overcome evil with good.'

"But the place on which we stand suggested yet another lesson. I have spoken of our dealing with others, let me say a word on what is in one sense more important, because it is the source and foundation of all right dealing with others. I mean our dealing with ourselves, our own personal work, the influence of Christ's spirit on our souls. We all remember, whether we were then in England or in India, with what fearful suddenness the great catastrophe of 1857 burst upon us. It seemed a type of that coming of the Son of Man of which the Scripture speaks—As it was in the days of Noah so shall it be also in the days of the son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the Ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. The residents in this place, and other places, were pursuing their ordinary occupations, living the usual life of an Indian station, with all its mixture of good and evil, the same life which we in our several homes in this country are now leading day by day. Suddenly the thunderbolt fell, the flood came, and swept them all away. How solemnly does this remind us of our Lord's frequent assurances to His disciples, before He left them alone amidst the dangers and chances of the world, that a Christian's only safe-guards are watchfulness and prayer—'Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.' What a warning to be always watching against carelessness and sin, for we know not at what time our Lord doth come! What a lesson to be much in prayer, that we may have confidence in the day of trial! How deeply should we feel the need of securing to ourselves the love and help of a Friend who will be mighty to save in time of trouble, and of placing before our hearts a brighter and better hope than this world's sorrow and cruelties and persecutions can ever take away. My brethren, that Friend who will never desert us is the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom, though now we see Him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. That hope which will never be taken from us, in the hope of a continuing city, whose builder and maker is God. And so let me conclude all that I am trying to express, by reminding you how our Saviour promised that—He would never fail in life or death those who diligently seek Him. Listen to some of His own blessed words:—'Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also.' Remember that He spoke these words on a night of bitter sorrow, and that they have since availed to calm many a storm of grief for eighteen hundred years. So let them now comfort any of us who are this day painfully reminded of loved friends and kindred, who here, through much tribulation, entered into their rest, and strengthen us all to meet patiently and courageously any trial, public or private, by which it may at any time hereafter please God to test the reality of our Christian faith."

After this, the Chaplain of Cawnpore, the Rev. Mr. Stamper, read the usual prayers; a hymn—"Lord, and what shall this man do,"—followed, and, last of all, the Bishop, in a clear and most fervent tone, pronounced the following benediction:—

"The Lord bless us, and keep us, the Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon us, and give us peace, now and for evermore.—Amen."

Thus ended a ceremony, as impressive as it was solemn, and one which recalled many a sorrowful reminiscence, and moistened many an eye. There were thousands of native spectators, but they were very properly kept without the garden enclosure. All was over by 6 o'clock.—Gazette, Feb. 14.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PATNA.—The following is a full official report of the speech delivered by the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal at a durbar held at Patna on Jan. 20:—"My Native Friends,—It gives me very great pleasure, after nearly a quarter of a century, to return to the Division in which I commenced my career as a public servant, and to find myself surrounded by few indeed of those whom I can remember, but by another generation, the sons of those with whom I was then acquainted, with whom I laboured, and who worked heartily and zealously with me. Since that time the progress of events throughout the world has been more striking and rapid than in any equal period of the world's history, and though in this province it has not been so marked as in other parts of India, even here it is not unobservable. As the most obvious instances of this progress, I may allude to the railway which brought me from Calcutta to this place in a few hours, and the electric telegraph by which intelligence may be flashed to the capital in as many minutes. Formerly, as you well know, and until the other day, the journey from this to Calcutta or Benares and back again was a work of many days, or even weeks, and was attended with such expense that none but the wealthy could afford to make it more than once or twice in their lives, and some even of the wealthy did not attempt it at all; but now it is in the power of every one, at a very trifling cost, to travel rapidly and safely to either place in one day and to return the next. It cannot be but that this great facility of intercommunication with the great centres of intelligence and ancient learning will tend to expand your thoughts and excite in you desires for that higher degree of civilisation without which the full fruition of the gifts of Providence, whether of mind and soul, or of the material creation, is impossible. I may also refer, in illustration of the progress I have mentioned, to the spread of education in India, to the wider field that has been opened for the employment of native gentlemen in the public service, to the construction and preservation of roads and other works of public utility, and to the steps that have been taken to accustom you to the practice of self government by the institution of juries, and by other inducements to you to take an interest and a part in the management of your own affairs. All these measures, as well as the improvement that has lately been made in the administration of civil and criminal justice, and in the organisation of the police, ought to convince you, and I believe do convince you, that you are living under a Government whose power and influence are exercised far more beneficially for the country than those of any Government that ever preceded it, and one which, whatever may be its defects, is sincerely anxious for the welfare of the people, and earnest in its endeavours to promote it. But, after all, no Government can do much for the improvement of the condition of the people unless it is supported by the co-operation of the people themselves. It is of no use that the Government found colleges and schools unless you send your children to them to be instructed. It is of no use that higher and more responsible employment is offered to you, unless you qualify yourselves to hold it, and all the efforts of Government for the suppression of crime are of little avail unless crime be condemned, not only by the public tribunals, but by the moral sense of the public. I charge you, therefore, to think of these things. I want no opinion of your loyalty and good disposition towards the Government. They are abundantly proved, and your own manifest self-interest would be a sufficient guarantee for them if other and higher motives were wanting. But what I do desire is evidence that you understand the signs of the times, that you realise the necessity for conforming yourselves to the circumstances in which Providence has placed you, and that you are really disposed to do something for yourselves by assisting the Government and the local officers in promoting all wise measures of improvement designed for your own benefit and that of your fellow countrymen. I have again to express the pleasure I have in meeting you here, and in taking leave of you I heartily bid you farewell."

ADDRESS TO THE EARL OF ELGIN FROM THE BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION OF OUDH.—The following Address was presented to Lord Elgin at Cawnpore, by the British Indian Association of Oudh:—"To his Excellency the Right Hon. the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, K.S., G.C.B., and K.S.I., Viceroy and Governor-general of India.—May it please your Lordship,—We, the undersigned, composing the Committee of the B.I. Association of this Province, a society formed of all the Native Taluqdars of Oudh, beg most respectfully to approach your Excellency with these few words of cordial welcome to our fair hint. We have been deeply interested in what we have learnt through the various channels of your Lordship's career as a statesman, a descendant and representative of the illustrious and chivalrous house of Bruce, and Administrator in the West and a Diplomatist in the East, and we are confident that in the enlarged sphere of public action to which it has pleased her Majesty's Government to call you, your eminent abilities will find a still more fitting and worthy field of exertion. You are happy, my Lord, in being the successor of a nobleman whose just and benign policy has restored a well-founded peace to our recently-distracted country; that policy we heartily commend to the favourable consideration of your Excellency, and we do this in the assurance that it will be well sustained by your own convictions and official course as the Viceroy of our gracious Sovereign. We cannot doubt, my lord, that that career of unwonted prosperity on which the empire has surely entered, will, under the blessing of the All Merciful God, and the wise application of your admirable talents as an administrator, be carried forward to a glorious destiny. We are confident, my lord, that the noble cause of national education, and the development of the material resources and industries of the country, will receive the benefit of your best attentions and enlarged experience. We are sure, my lord, you will give your voice for the enactment of equal laws and the just administration of the same to all classes of her Majesty's subjects in Hindostan. In this confidence and spirit of good will we again say, welcome to our fatherland. May health and happiness, and a peaceful and prosperous rule, be granted you by the Great Father and Sovereign of the Universe.—We have the honour to be, my lord, your lordship's most devoted and faithful subjects and servants. (Signed by the gentlemen who compose the committee of the association.) His lordship inquired who was the president of the association. The chief commissioner informed his lordship that Maharajah Drigbijay Singh, of Bulrampore, was the president, and Maharajah Mann Singh, the vice-president, and that the former, being on a sporting excursion to the distant Terai jungles, was unavoidably absent, or else he would have been too glad to pay his respects to his Excellency. His lordship observed that he was glad to find that the landed aristocracy of Oudh devoted their attention to questions affecting the general interest, and submitted their ideas to Government through their association. Such a course was alike beneficial to the people and useful to the Government.—Sumachar Hindoostani, Feb. 14.

MEDICAL MISSIONARIES.—The Lahore Chronicle has the following on the subject of medical missionaries; one of the topics discussed at the late Conference. There can be no doubt that a better plan for winning the confidence of the natives could not be devised:—"A few members of the medical profession and other laymen having had in consideration the benefit which would arise from an Auxiliary Medical Missionary Association in the Punjab, the subject was brought prominently before the Lahore Missionary Conference, and it was resolved that a committee be formed for considering the advisability of employing medical missionaries to a greater extent, and more systematically. The objects in view are, to make known in the Punjab the existence of a society in Edinburgh with this great aim; and, secondly, to co-operate and associate with that society by collecting funds on its behalf, and by seeking to derive benefit in this province and neighbourhood from its operations. It appears that in no place is there a greater opening, or prospect of advantage to the mission cause, than in the valley of Kashmir, and for several reasons it is believed that a medical missionary would be peculiarly eligible for that province. No regular medical advice is to be obtained; there is no fixed station of Europeans; the population is very numerous, and the country is governed by an independent prince, whose religious prejudices would be in some degree disarmed if the efforts of missionaries were united with those of a medical agency, whose labours would be directed to the relief of sickness and disease. A proposal is at this time going up from the Punjab to the Church Missionary Society, urging on them to extend their operations to Kashmir. It seems that the appointment of a medical man in connection with the mission would do more than anything else to conciliate prejudice, disarm opposition, and obtain a permanent entrance for the Gospel. It would greatly add to the power and comfort of the medical missionary if he were associated with an experienced minister of the Gospel, whose hands he would likewise strengthen. If his efforts were blessed with success, there would, humanly speaking, be a great effect produced on this part of India, where Kashmir is a household word. Circumstanced as the people are, they feel the value of European influence and would see in the conduct, and hear from the lips of the missionary physician, the Gospel law of love which elevates his character, and makes him differ from themselves. It is the opinion of all travellers that the people would hail his arrival with the utmost gladness, and would repose confidence in his skill. For the value which the mountain tribes attach to European medicine, the committee would refer amongst others to the wonderful results of the labours of Dr. Asahel Grant, the father of the Nestorians, to the statements contained in Dr. Hoffmeister's journey in Kunawur, to other works of eastern travel, and to the experience of every European traveller in the hill territory of India. All who are willing to co-operate in this scheme are requested to remit their contributions to Dr. Farquhar, secretary for the Medical Mission Fund; or to H. Gunn, Esq., Agra Bank, Lahore."

SATTARA.—By the way a most curious incident occurred in Sattara a few days ago. A native man who was given up for defunct was bathed according to custom, besmeared with the red stuff "goolall," and ashes, placed on bamboo sticks and finally walked off to give him his last due, a good roasting, but whilst on the way to the river up he gets and wished very politely to know where he was being carried to. Those who composed the funeral party were frightened out of their wits, and were going to take to their heels under the impression of the poor man turning a ghost, but eventually they were convinced that he was in his proper senses, and with astonishment unbound him and accompanied him back home. He looked more like a ghost with all the goolall and ashes about him than a human being. I am almost inclined to believe that the poor man was in a trance. This will, I hope, convince the natives so far as to the advisability of keeping their dead for at least twelve hours before committing them to their last resting place.

COLLISION BETWEEN THE RAILWAY AND A GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL.—We hear with much regret that another collision has taken place between the Punjab Railway authorities and the engineer officer appointed to consult with them on behalf of Government. The latter forwarded a very unfavourable report of progress on the Mooltan line, and animadverted strongly on the action of the company's agent, bringing down on the latter the severe censure of the Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. Stevens was not the man to allow the imputations cast on him to remain unnoticed, and has, in a long memorandum, replied to the assertions of Major Warrant, and shown, as we are told, conclusively, that the consulting engineer had made charges against the company's servants which could not be substantiated.—Delhi Gazette.

THE BENGAL ASIATIC SOCIETY has completed a year more prosperous than most of its predecessors, thanks to the reduced rate of subscription. The Mofussil rates are still too high, and the decision which extends Calcutta to a radius of fifteen miles distant seems arbitrary. The present number of members is 311, and the estimated annual income Rs. 16,329 to meet an expenditure of Rs. 14,671. The State discharges only its duty in granting Rs. 200 monthly for the support of the Natural History Museum, which is due to the labours of Mr. Blyth. The museum was visited during the past year by no less than 258 persons daily, of whom the majority were natives, and some 20 were females. Unlike the Madras Museum, these are bona fide visitors. Colonel Thuillier deserves the honour of President in succession to Mr. Grote. When will Government decide as to the terms on which it will accept the society's offer to make its collections the nucleus of an Imperial Museum?

THE INCOME TAX.—We hear the proceeds of the last monthly sale of opium amount to 470,000 Rs., the average monthly proceeds of former years being about 320,000 Rs., and the total income derived from opium during the last year is six crores against four crores of the preceding years. The cultivation of opium has evidently increased, and it is expected to yield a larger amount. Another new source of revenue to the State is the stamp duty recently introduced into the Straits, which is estimated at about sixty lacs per annum. These augmentations of income will, we hope, be found sufficient for abandoning the Income Tax, which is confessedly the prolific source of extortion, oppression, and discontent. We think we faithfully represent the feelings of the people at large when we state that they are prepared to put up with any but the Income Tax, and we sincerely hope that from August 1863, it will at once be done away.—Indian Field.

TEA PLANTATIONS IN THE PUNJAB.—Our Kangra correspondent appears to have been correctly informed as to the intention of the Punjab Government to extend tea cultivation into the district of Hazara. A friend writes us to say that he saw an immense number of plants on their way from Holta to Rawulpindee, on the Umritsur platform, accompanied by six gardeners to assist in forming the plantation. They said there were 70,000 seedlings in the baskets. They had been eight days on the way from Holta to Umritsur, and would reach Rowulpindee by bullock train in about five days more. The Punjab Government do these things with a will when they set about them. We look with some curiosity for the result of the silk experiment at Umritsur, which has been liberally endowed by the same Government, and has, we see by the report of the Agricultural Society of the Punjab, commenced auspiciously and at a much earlier date than any previous year, owing to due care being taken in obtaining an early supply of leaves.—Delhi Gazette.

CAPTAIN SMYTH, who was to have led Lord Canning's expedition to Tibet, has, along with Dr. Stewart, applied for leave from Government to visit Lhasa on his own resources. Though Sir W. F. Bruce is not averse to obtaining passports at Peking, and Lord Elgin is eager to remove all obstacles to a free intercourse between this and China, yet his Excellency thinks the Thibetan and Chinese frontiers are not safe enough at present to allow these officers to risk their lives. We regret this, if the officers are willing to undergo the risk. Now, if ever, when we are helping the Tartars to put down the rebels, is it the time to ask a quid for our quo. It is time that our submission to the barbarous exclusiveness of the Chinese feudatories was at an end, and the visit of private officers would put our treaty right to the test without involving any political risk.—Friend of India.

BANK OF UPPER INDIA.—The half-yearly meeting of the Bank of Upper India was held at Meerut on the 7th Feb., and for a bank that has been so short a time in existence the profits declared (viz., Rs. 883 2-11) cannot but be looked upon as large, and shows that the manager's exertions have proved most satisfactory. The salary which the meeting decided upon giving to the manager (viz., 200 rupees per mensem) appears a very small remuneration for his services, but I imagine that the bonus proposed to be given to him will make up for it. A call of 5 per cent. is to be made on the 1st July and 1st October, of the current year, and on the 1st January, 1864. A proposal to the effect that the capital of the bank be augmented to two lacs of rupees by 1,000 new shares, one share for every five to be given to present shareholders at par, if demanded, and the remainder to be sold at a premium of five per cent., was negated by twenty-three to twenty.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—We regret to have to record a fatal accident which occurred at this station, on Saturday, the 7th, to an officer of H.M.'s 23rd R. W. F. Captain Armstrong of that regiment, was thrown out of his buggy, and received such severe injuries that he died in three hours. Mrs. Armstrong, who was driving with him at the time, did not escape without considerable injury. It was caused by the horse taking fright at a kranchi coming along the road. We have seldom heard of an accident of this kind attended by so many painful circumstances. The deceased officer and his wife had left their home but a short time before to pay a round of ordinary morning visits. To that home he never returned alive, having been taken into the house of an officer near the spot where the accident occurred, and where he breathed his last, never, we believe, recovering his senses after the first shock.

THE TARIFF.—Amongst the various reports now afloat regarding the revision of the Tariff, there is an dit that Sir Charles Trevelyan intends to reduce the ad valorem duty on all imports, and to impose a small duty of at least one anna on every package imported, and entered in the Custom-house. It is with this intention, perhaps, that the new Financier has called upon the Collector of Customs to submit a return of the number of packages imported during the year 1862. The number of packages imported annually may be calculated, upon reliable data, at about 90 lacs, so that there would be a clear revenue of nearly 6 lacs of Rupees per annum, at the rate of one anna for every package.—Hurkaru.

BABOO JOYKISSEN MOOKERJEE, the well-known zemindar of Ooterapara, eight miles from Calcutta, who was imprisoned for forging a title-deed to land, has been freed by the Lieutenant-governor, at the recommendation of the Privy Council. The case is peculiar. The highest court refused to entertain the criminal appeal preferred by Mr. Newmarch, but recommended that the prisoner should be set at liberty, as the evidence on which he was condemned was unsatisfactory. We trust we have heard the last of fraternal squabbles, such as have long made both Ooterapara and Serampore notorious, and keep half the house property in the latter in a dilapidated state.

MILITARY ITEMS.—The 15th Bengal Cavalry, which has been in camp here during the recent visit of the Viceroy, marched on February 21st towards Jhansie.—The Calcutta papers have been making a mystery about the 13th and 43rd Regiments being ordered home immediately. They will go home as previously intended at the end of this year, and not before.—We observe that the 107th, the old 3rd Europeans, is to be completed by volunteers from the following regiments: 7th R. F., 23rd R. W. F., 35th, 46th, 79th, 81st, 82nd, 40th, 101st. Each volunteer to get a bounty of £1. The reason these regiments are selected is that they are 8 per cent. above their authorized strength.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF left Cawnpore for Lucknow on the morning of the 13th, and went on direct to Gondah, where he arrived next morning, the 14th, spent the day in inspecting the regiment, barracks, &c., dined at the mess that night, and left again for Lucknow, arriving there on Sunday afternoon, the 15th. He intended remaining there to see the military prison, &c., and going on to Seetapore, on Monday, the 16th. His Excellency and his staff will rejoin headquarters camp at Shahjehanpore.—Delhi Gazette, Feb. 21.

COTTON TRADE OF THE PUNJAB.—The local Government recently instituted inquiries with the view of ascertaining the quantity of cotton exported this year from the Punjab in comparison with last year, and by what route and means of transport it reached a shipping port. It has been discovered that not more than 1,300 maunds were forwarded from Umritsur in 1861, whereas 35,000 maunds were actually despatched during 1862, and had sufficient carriage been available the quantity would have exceeded 50,000 maunds. The want of presses is much felt, for were the cotton screwed into compact bales it could be more readily exported in larger quantities than by the present unwieldy bulky packages. A portion of the cotton from Umritsur was conveyed by carts to Hurrekee Ghat on the Sutlej, whence it was taken down that river to the Indus by country boats and some by the Oriental Inland Company's steamers. Some again were conveyed by rail to Lahore, and thence by country boats down the Ravee, while a further portion was carried on camels or in country carts to its destination. The quantity of cotton exported from Mooltan to Kurrachee in 1861 was insignificant, but the following statement shows that the trade had become important in 1862:—

	Mds.
Shipped on steamers...	72,000
Despatched by boats and carts	25,500
On the wharf waiting for transport	80,000
Total	127,500

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HYDERABAD, DECCAN, Feb. 8.—Mr. Yule arrived here on the 31st of January. His first visit to the Nizam was paid this morning, and I am happy to say the question of the boot is finally disposed of, that is, I presume so, from the circumstance of Mr. Yule and his party having taken off their shoes, and, as formerly, sat on the floor. His Highness the Nizam wore the star and riband of India. I feel confident that the report of Mr. Yule will satisfy the Governor-general that it was quite impossible his Highness the Nizam should ever have exhibited any mark of scorn towards the British Resident and English gentlemen. This forms no part of his character, and its assumption, if it was not a wilful misstatement, was the result of foregone conclusions in the reporter's mind. The son of Solimanjah, second cousin to the Nizam, claiming arrears from his Highness, or his father's patrimony, I have not accurately ascertained which (perhaps both), has posted himself for the last three days with a hundred and fifty Arabs, Rohillahs, and Deccanees at the gate of his father's house, situated in the ohawk, and will not permit the usual evening bazaar to be held there. This affair will be settled in a day or two, in all probability by the Arabs, who take part in it as creditors of the son of Solimanjah, being paid.—Englishman, Feb. 16.

A SHIKAR ADVENTURE.—An entertaining story is going round sporting circles, at the expense of a gallant officer on the Staff, who has recently signalled himself as a dead shot at "a tusker." Recently from England, and taken by duty to the Blue Mountains, this adventurous sportsman burned to try his new rifle against an elephant. The hill shikarrees received peremptory instructions to bring early notice of the appearance of one in any direction, at any distance. One morning intelligence came that there was a magnificent tusker in a jungle some miles away. The rifle and appurtenances were soon ready, the hill pony saddled, and eager for the prey the intending elephanticide rode off to the jungle. A distant noise of the crashing of boughs assured him that he had not been misinformed. Soon he caught sight of a magnificent tusker stripping the trees on each side of him with majestic leisure. The sportsman's heart beat high at the view of the splendid animal that was destined to be the first trophy of his rifle. A good position was at once taken up, and the crack of the rifle was followed by the thundering downcrash of the "magnificent tusker." Whilst waiting at a respectful distance for the cessation of the convulsive agonies of the death struggle, the elated sportsman fancied he heard the clink of chains, and, advancing to view the huge quarry, to his no small chagrin discovered that the chains were attached to the elephant's feet. It was clear that he had shot a tame elephant! In a short time came rushing up the distracted mahout, who tore his hair and flung his arms about in distraction to see his master's best shikar elephant a corpse. Of course there was a scene. The gallant officer returned home feeling uncomfortable, having learned that the trophy of his rifle was a favourite elephant belonging to a neighbouring Rajah. The next day he received a civil but peremptory demand for Rs. 2,500, the price of the slain animal, and when the last intelligence left the hills he was endeavouring, without much prospect of success, to compromise the matter for Rs. 2,000! He has been heard to mutter that if shooting a tusker is very exciting, it is also very expensive. We fancy an excellent new rifle will be soon in the market.—Madras Times, Feb. 4.

HOSPITALITY OF THE GOVERNOR.—It is rumoured that Sir William Denison is opening the hospitable doors of Government House to native gentlemen more widely of late than has generally been the case. The difficulty of devising means of breaking down the barriers which keep so much apart the various classes that dwell, either permanently or temporarily, in India, is very great, and Sir William's attempt is at any rate a move in the right direction. Still our amusements, singing, dancing, &c., must be even more tedious to the high class natives than their nantch parties are to us. The desideratum is some entertainment in which all could join without any being bored. Promenades in pleasant gardens like those of the Agri-Horticultural Society, displays of fireworks, reviews of troops, to which all the principal natives might be specially invited, would probably answer the purpose better than invitations to purely European balls and musical per-ties. Something out to be done, but as usual the difficulty is to decide what the something should be.—Athenæum, Feb. 14.

THE MADRAS WIDOWS' AND ORPHANS' FUND have held their annual meeting. From the report it would appear that the society is in a flourishing condition; the capital now in hand is upwards of eight lacs of rupees.

BOMBAY.

SAMLAJEE FAIR.

A letter from the Political Agent in the Mahes Kanta to the Hon. H. L. Anderson, Chief Secretary to Government, upon the occasion of the Samlajee Fair, which was held between the 3rd and 17th of November last, reports that the attendance which was estimated at 110,000 would be more correctly stated at about 80,000, and that the value of the goods and cattle brought for sale amounted to Rs. 1,045,815, that of the goods sold amounted to 864,072, and goods of the value of 1,081,743 remained unsold. These results are unfavourable when compared with those of the Fair immediately preceding, yet it might be observed that as the average of the five years preceding 1861 gives as the value of goods brought for sale and goods sold Rs. 877,354, and Rs. 725,645 respectively, there is an increase in the amount of the sales this year as compared therewith to the extent of Rs. 138,427.

The merchandise brought for sale to this fair exceeded in value that of last year and of any former year, by Rupees 68,094, but the quantity of goods carried away unsold was very large, owing to the prevalence of fever in the Mahes Kanta, and H. H. the Gaekwar's visit to his Mahals having prevented many from attending. The statement appended to the report gives the particulars of the goods offered for sale, sold, and remaining unsold.

Owing to the visit of H. H. the Gaekwar, the principal purchasers of opium who reside in the Gaekwar Mahals of Deygoom, Bejapoor, &c., did not attend the fair, and, in consequence, little business was done in opium, and the piece goods market was doubtless affected thereby also.

The sales of European piece goods, although not equal to those of 1861, were very much larger than those of former years, as shown below:—

1856...	35,000	brought to the fair...	35,000	sold.
1860...	40,000	"	25,000	"
1861...	100,000	"	100,000	"
1862...	80,000	"	60,000	"

The value of the cloths brought to Samlajee fair for sale and sold was as follows:—

	Bought.	Sold.
English chintzes piece goods	80,000	60,000
Amedabad silks.....	170,000	100,000
Cotton cloths manufactured in
Guzerat	100,000	50,000
Cloths of Purataghar Booranpoo ...	240,000	12,000
Handkerchiefs of Jeypoor	1,200	1,000

591,200 831,000

In last year's report the want of accommodation for the traders at Samlajee was noticed, and the Maharaj of Edur promised to build 100 extra shops, making the number up to 400; this has not been done, but I believe the Maharaj intends to have them ready before the next fair is held.

The Maharaj of Edur attended the fair in person, with a view to looking after the arrangements for the preservation of the peace, and giving encouragement to the traders, but was obliged to leave before the fair closed.

For the preservation of the peace at the fair, and for the protection of traders and visitors generally, the troops, as below*, were employed in guarding the property at the fair, and in patrolling the roads leading to it, and the fact of no theft or robbery having occurred at the fair, or on any of the roads for many miles around it, may be considered as satisfactory proof of the efficiency of the police arrangements made for the fair, which were carried out under the superintendence of the Maharaj of Edur, the Dufur-

Resolution of Government, dated the 18th of Feb., 1863.—The report on the Samlajee Fair of 1862 does not present such favourable results as the one held in 1861, but the Honourable the Governor in Council observes with satisfaction that the value of the sales exceeded the average sum realised in the five preceding years. The police arrangements appear to have been very efficient, and the Political Agent should be instructed to express the acknowledgments of Government to the Maharajah of Edur for his exertions on this occasion.

Chief Secretary to Government.

REVENUES OF BOMBAY.

The Land and Sayer revenues of the Bombay Presidency amounted in 1861-62 to Rs. 2,44,38,829. Of this sum the land revenue of the Northern Division contributed Rs. 10,852,132. This was a decrease on the realisations of the previous year by Rs. 56,481. The decrease was in Ahmedabad and Surat, and was chiefly owing to the scanty fall of rain in those collectorates. The total realisations on account of Sayer revenue in the Northern Division amounted to Rs. 11,03,790; being an increase of Rs. 89,182 over the previous year's collections. The land revenue of the Southern Division contributed to the total above-mentioned the sum of Rs. 9,799,416. This was an increase over that of the preceding year of Rs. 3,57,500. This increase all the collectorates of the division helped to realise except Rutnagherry. In this collectorate there was a decrease, owing mainly to the low rates at which the Government grain revenue of the year was commuted—a result stated to be invariably attendant in this collectorate on a favourable fall of rain, in consequence of the anomalous mode of settlement which awaits correction by the operations of the revenue survey now in progress in the collectorate. The increase in the other collectorates is ascribable chiefly to extended cultivation, and the application of the summary settlement to unadjusted Inam holdings. The extended cultivation, we believe, was in many cases effected by the ryots taking up additional land to that which they already held, and in a number of cases by ryots returning to and cultivating lands which they had previously abandoned in consequence of the unprofitableness of the cultivation. Indeed, in both divisions of the presidency there are numerous applications by parties who would fain resume the occupation of lands which they had previously been glad to abandon. These are sure indications of increasing prosperity on the part of the ryots, and of the increasing profitableness of agricultural labours; and this, in its turn, is a sure indication of general prosperity. There are large tracts of land in Khandesh lying idle, which bear marks of former cultivation. From these the ryots were probably for the most part driven by the Bheels. These lands are being again taken up, in many instances by Bheels themselves. This is the result of good government, and an exemplification of its benefits. The recent development of the Indian cotton trade has no doubt influenced the extension of cultivation in the southern division. The abolition of slavery in America is a guarantee for the permanency and increase of this development, and consequently for the extension of cultivation. The Sayer revenues in the Southern Division amounted to Rs. 28,83,489. This was an increase of Rs. 3,21,534 over 1860-61: an increase attributable principally to the operation of the Income-tax and Stamp Acts, and to the effects upon the latter of the new law for the limitation of suits. This new law caused double the number of suits to be brought before the civil courts, and produced consequently a large demand for stamps. Thus, in the Land and Sayer revenues of the Presidency we have an increase in 1861-62 of Rs. 7,08,216. Here is proof of progress. Sind also shows an increase, and gives its indications of increasing prosperity. The totals of land revenue in the Province during 1860-61 and 1861-62 were as follows:—

Increase in 1861-62 Ra. 4,04,395

This increase is stated to be owing partly to the improved condition of the canals, but mainly to the season having been more favourable than the previous one. The Sayer revenues of the province of 1861-62 amounted to Rs. 10,99,751, against Rs. 9,28,522 in the preceding year, showing an increase of nearly one-and-three-quarter lakhs for rupees. The total of the income-tax collections made throughout the whole Presidency from 1st August, 1861, to 31st July, 1862, amounted to Rs. 39,31,185, in the following proportions:—1 per cent., Rs. 7,69,880; 2 per cent., Rs. 9,33,786; 3 per cent., Rs. 22,27,519. This is exclusive of Rs. 1,35,655 realised at Bhundara, Chunda, Chundwarah, Nagpore, and Raipoor between 1st August, 1861, and 30th April, 1862. The addition of this sum gives a total of Rs. 40,66,840, while the collections of the preceding year amounted to Rs. 36,00,000; giving the last year an increase of Rs. 4,66,840. Here is a large and increasing source of revenue. It is, at the same time, the most obnoxious form of taxation, and quite unsuited to India. We believe that the forty lakhs in this presidency might be provided in some other way, by still further retrenchments in the public expenditure, and by working more advantageously other modes of taxation. The abolition of the Income-tax is certainly a consummation devoutly to be wished, as it is a cause of popular dissatisfaction, and as it is really unjust to certain classes, while exemption from it, in favour of particular classes, would be invidious. The Stamp Duties realised during the year, levied under Act XXXVI. of 1860, amounted to Rs. 31,03,947. This Act was in operation only for seven months of the year, 1860-1, during which time the collections were Rs. 23,91,189. This source of revenue might be worked more effectually. The stamp duty is cheerfully paid; the receiver of money does not grudge the cost of the stamp, and would not if it were double what it now is. The Abkaree revenue of the island of Bombay for the year was the largest ever before realised, having amounted to Rs. 1,62,298; an increase on the previous year of Rs. 43,266. There was increase of Rs. 360 in the land revenue of the island, the total for the year having been Rs. 77,466. During the year under report the attention of the Revenue Commissioner, Southern Division, was directed to the carrying out of the measures which had been sanctioned by Government at the close of the preceding year, for a summary settlement, by way of compromise of claims to exemption from the payment of land revenue in the districts subject to Act XI. of 1852, viz.:—The Sattara, Pooná, Ahmednuggur, Dharwar, Belgaum, and Sholapore Collectorates. The financial result of the settlement, so far as it was completed on the 30th April last, is a permanent addition to the annual public revenue of Rupees 2,68,976, arising from the levy of quarter assessment and annual nuzzerana (amounting in all to five annas on each rupee of what would be the full government assessment) on unadjudicated holdings, which will henceforth be continued permanently, either as private property or as endowment to temples, and such like public institutions. To the above sum may be added the receipts, amounting to about Rupees 21,520, which may be expected to accrue from the levy of annual Nuzzerana, on 1845, adjudicated hereditary Inams. These under the old rules were neither transferable nor heritable by adopted sons.

or by the collateral heirs of the grantee, but under the summary Settlement they will be continuable as the private property of the holders without any restrictions whatever. In all cases in which the annual Nuzzerana amounts to ten Rupees or upwards, the option of paying in lieu thereof a sum equal to one year's assessment of the holding on the occasion of each succession, and two years' assessment on the occasion of transfers, was offered to each holder; but only forty-nine have elected to pay the Nuzzerana occasionally, instead of annually. The total value of these is Rupees 42,305, and the average annual income which will probably accrue to Government from them may be estimated at Rs. 3,000. The total annual profit to the State from the settlement, completed up to the 30th April last, may, therefore, be estimated at about Rupees 2,93,000. Such are the sources and amounts of the revenues of this Presidency, exclusive of customs, salt, and opium, which we have previously noticed.—Bombay Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ADDRESS TO SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN.—“To the Hon. Sir Charles Trevelyan, K.C.B., Calcutta, Sir,—In the name of the Bombay Association I beg to offer you our sincere congratulations on your appointment as Financial Member of the Governor-general's Council. It is now about two and a-half years since you retired from the Government of Madras, and left the shores of India amid universal regret; and in the address which we had the honour of presenting you, on receiving news of your retirement, we expressed a hope that you may yet return to our shores to fill a high appointment. We are now rejoiced to find that your hope has at last been realised, and you are again come amongst us, with whom more than any other statesman you have identified yourself, understanding our character and knowing our wants. Trusting that you may be long spared to give the State the benefit of your ripe experience and wise counsels for the good government of the people of India, I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient humble servant, VENAYECKROW JUGONNATHJEE, Secretary, Bombay Association. Bombay, Jan. 26, 1863.”

“TO VENAYECKROW JUGONNATHJEE, Esq., Secretary to the Bombay Association. Calcutta, Feb. 6, 1863, Sir,—I request that you will convey to the Bombay Association my best thanks for the kind expression of their feeling towards me contained in your letter of the 26th ultimo. The first Indian cities I visited were Bombay and Poonah, and the first idea I got of Indian administration was from Mr. Elphinstone's beneficent example. It is, therefore, impossible for me not to take a warm interest in the prosperity of our great western mart, our Indian Liverpool, as it is in so many points of view. The Association expect more from me than it will be possible for me to realise, but I shall always do my best.—Believe me, sir, your obedient humble servant, C. E. TREVELYAN.”

BOMBAY CHRISTIAN LITERARY SOCIETY.—Monday, Feb. 16, witnessed a meeting of a kind we could wish to see more frequent in Bombay—one of pleasant, intellectual, and social enjoyment. We allude to a Conversazione of the members of the Bombay Christian Literary Society, and other friends, at Sir Alexander Grant's bungalow. No trouble had been spared by Sir Alexander and Lady Grant in preparing for the reception and entertainment of their guests, nothing certainly was wanting on their part to make every one present feel pleased and delighted. The assemblage was large and varied, the ladies well represented. The sources of instruction were varied. Dr. Giraud contributed not a little to the entertainment by the exhibition of the beautiful oxyhydrogen light, by his interesting experiments with the galvanic battery, illustrating the convertibility of the forms of force, and by his explanations of some of the many diagrams which had been got together for the entertainment of the company, especially of the light thrown by recent spectrum analysis on the condition of the sun and the nature of his spots, and of the conditions necessary to the success of artesian wells. Sir Alexander Grant read some extracts from old authors on the condition of Bombay in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, which seemed to be highly interesting to every one. Dr. Wilson gave some more antiquarian information on the same subject. And Mr. Newton exhibited the curious little machine invented by Foucault to illustrate and demonstrate the diurnal rotation of the earth. Doubtless the name of the Gyroscope is in the Index Expurgatorious—for it for ever removes the rotation from the region of admirable hypothesis into that of incontestable fact. This instrument consists of a heavy disc of metal which can be made to revolve on an axis with great velocity and which is so placed in a series of gimbals so delicately hung that it is almost at entire liberty to turn in any direction. If the disc be set in motion freely in space, it will—unless disturbed or constrained—preserve absolutely the plane of its rotation; and to effect this it will even overcome slight obstacles. This was beautifully illustrated by its even resisting the force of gravity. As the earth rotates carrying the Gyroscope along with it the revolving ring or disc cannot remain precisely in its original relation to surrounding objects, because its displacement by the rotation of the earth would constantly change the plane in space in which it revolves. The company seemed greatly interested in the sensations produced when it was attempted to alter the plane of motion by the hand. If any members of the society were absent they lost a treat. Such meetings are not frequent in Bombay; it would be indeed a pity if they were, unless appreciated and attended as they deserve. Nevertheless, we greatly need them to divert us from the monotony of daily cares, and the drudgery of single pursuits; and those who set the example of trying to introduce such deserve every assistance and encouragement.—Bombay Gazette.

THE STEAMER “NEMESIS.”—The P. and O. Company's steamer Nemesis, Captain Weston, which arrived here on Saturday last, having been repaired, left again on the following day, for Galle and Calcutta. The Nemesis struck on the Bellows Rock just off Galle harbour about eleven o'clock p.m., on the 16th inst., and backed off again in about ten minutes, not making very much water. Her passengers, baggage, &c., were transferred undamaged to the P. and O. steamer Bombay, which left for Aden and Suez on the 18th Feb.

BRIGADIER LIDDELL.—We deeply regret to hear of the alarming illness of Brigadier Liddell, and that he will be compelled to leave India immediately. The brigadier is a distinguished officer, possessing great Indian experience; and no officer holding this command was ever more popular. He enjoys the esteem of all under his command, as well as the whole community. It will be a difficult matter indeed to supply his place in Bombay. We trust that he will be speedily restored to health, and we should rejoice to see him soon back amongst us. His name is one of those that will ever be connected in history with the deliverance of British India from her deepest trouble. The part he performed in the memorable events of 1857-58 can never be forgotten. He will be held in lasting remembrance.—Bombay Gazette.

DESTRUCTION OF THE P. & O. CO.'S STEAMER “CADIZ.”—The P. and O. Company have suffered another loss in one of the finest steamers of their noble fleet. The Hong Kong papers give the following particulars relative to the damage sustained by the P. and O. Company's steamer Cadiz, from a fire which broke out when she was scarcely clear of Hong Kong harbour on her voyage to Shanghai. It appears she started on the 10th Jan. with the European mails, and having on board about twenty-five Europeans, and some sixty Chinese passengers, in addition to a valuable cargo, said to be worth half a million sterling. When she had proceeded as far as East Point an alarm of fire was given, and the danger being found to be imminent, Captain Hazlewood determined to put back, and signalled distress, whereon H.M.'s steamers Euryalus, Cormorant, Sanspareil, and Princess Charlotte despatched boats to her assistance. The company's vessels, China, Benares, and Fort William also sent their officers and men. The men-of-war's hoses, aided by the steam hose of the Cadiz, soon enabled the crew to remove some of the opium from the forehold where the fire was raging, but their efforts to subdue the flames being unavailing, owing to the smoke from the burning opium almost suffocating those at work, it was determined to scuttle the vessel. She was, therefore, run ashore, and fired into several times. It is stated that the cargo in the after-hold sustained no damage, but the opium, about 160 chests in the forehold, was all either burnt or saturated. The fore saloon was completely destroyed, and fore-deck burnt. The cause of the fire was unknown. The Benares had been despatched to Shanghai with the mails and balance of cargo.”

* By Government.

THE LATE SIR JAMES OUTRAM.—It has been already announced that the funeral of this distinguished soldier will take place in Westminster Abbey on Wednesday next. It was originally intended that the hour of burial should be twelve. Owing, however, to Wednesday being a saint's day, the interment will not take place before one o'clock.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

LAW AND THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The Friend of India states that the junior civilians of the Punjab have initiated a most important movement. Civil Service Judges have been long enough taunted and ridiculed for their comparatively scanty knowledge of the law. The young Punjab civilians propose that they should be granted three years' leave of absence in England, instead of one, after seven years' service, that they may have the advantage of studying for and being called to the bar. This would assuredly improve the judicial department of the Civil Service, and rescue it from the disgrace of many absurd decisions that are almost necessarily the result of a want of all legal training. It appears that the Civil Service feels itself deeply aggrieved that so many good Civil Service appointments are now bestowed on trained lawyers and other "interlopers," but if the young Civil Servants qualify themselves by legal study for judgeships and other judicial appointments, they will surely have the preference over outsiders. One correspondent of the Indian papers complains that young men enter the Civil Service from England on the pledge of the Government that they shall succeed in due course to offices in the service, a list of which, with the salaries attached, is published in the Directories. On the faith of this they risk health, and separate themselves from their friends and families, and endure a long exile, and resign all the delights of home. But when they reach India their hopes are blighted. They find, when it is too late to return to England and commence a different career, that their best days are to be passed at remote out-stations. Take away, says the writer, the few prizes still left, and where is the incentive to young men in the Civil Service to render themselves more efficient public servants. We believe that both the home authorities and the local are willing enough to recognise and reward extraordinary merit and efficiency in either of their services, civil or military; and that in the Civil Service especially distinguished abilities and superior accomplishments are eagerly turned to the advantage of the State and to the individual himself. If the Home Government should grant the petition of the young civil students for the opportunity to study the law, they will most assuredly find, after acquiring a competent professional knowledge, that their labours have not been wasted.

EMIGRATION OF NATIVE LABOURERS.

At the meeting of the Vice-Regal Legislative Council at Calcutta, on February 5th, a Bill was passed relating to the emigration of native labourers to the Danish colony of St. Croix. There had been considerable difference of opinion amongst the members of the Select Committee appointed to report on the character of the Bill, but as it was understood that this individual Bill might be passed for the present without inconvenience, as it would not interfere with the contemplated amendment of the Emigration laws now under consideration, it met with no opposition in the Council. The most noticeable part of the discussion or conversation in Council was the general expression of surprise at the very mistaken notion entertained in England that India was over-populated, and that on that account native emigration should be warmly encouraged. The very reverse of this is the fact. Most districts of India are, comparatively speaking, thinly populated, and it is found that every emigration of a native labourer is a loss to British India, for many great public undertakings have been seriously obstructed and delayed by the scarcity of native workmen. Still no one even now proposes that native emigration should be positively forbidden or even discouraged, for every man under our free Government is entitled to carry his labour or his goods to what market he chooses. The numerous Government works, and railway companies and agricultural speculations under European superintendence, will soon raise the price of labour; and the Indian workmen, who are naturally averse to quitting their own localities, will become satisfied with their home earnings in preference to seeking a foreign market under many dangers and inconveniences.

THE BENIGHTED.

For nearly half a century the Madras Presidency has been distinguished by the sobriquet of "The Benighted," and has submitted to the sneer with great meekness. But not long ago the Friend of India christened it "The Sleepy Hollow," and as this name found its way into "the leading journal of Europe," the result became too much for Madras human nature to endure. The Times went so far as to endorse the insult, and to declare that the description of Madras as the sleepy hollow of the empire was "true enough; at any rate, by comparison." The Madras Athenæum protests against this "calling of bad names," and maintains that though they have a King Log at Madras, in the shape of Sir W. Denison, the locality itself teems with life and industry, and contributes proportionately a much larger share to the Imperial Exchequer than Bengal has yet done. Abstracting the four crores of opium duty which are dexterously taken from the Chinese, the inhabitants of Bengal are found to pay less towards the finances of the empire than the Madrasese—the former only pay taxes at the rate of fifty pence per head, while the latter pay sixty-eight pence per head. Then, again, more is spent on the administration of justice in Madras than in Bengal. In the latter only thirteen rupees per square mile are appropriated to law and justice; in Madras eighteen rupees are devoted to the same object. On public education the sum spent in both Presidencies is only one-fiftieth part of a rupee a head! Neither Presidency, then, has much to boast of on this point; but bearing in mind the difference of the two localities, as to their respective amounts of population, even on this point Madras has the moral superiority. The statistics of crime are compared, and again Madras triumphs over Bengal. In one year the number of prisoners in jail in Bengal on one particular day was 17,524, in Madras only 6,000. One in every 2,372 of the people of Bengal was a gaol-bird, and only one in every 3,833 of the population of Madras. We say nothing of the accuracy or inaccuracy of these statistics. We tell the tale as it is told to us. But the editor of the Madras Athenæum ought to be very much obliged to us for bringing the grievances of his presidency to the notice of the British public. Let it, then, be understood at home that Bengal has no just reason to look down upon the sister Presidency, and characterise it as sleepy and benighted. "The cry of the Benighted and Sleepy Hollow," says the Athenæum, "is not only unjust, but comes very badly from our Calcutta friends, who only provoke odious comparisons by calling public attention to the mote in the eye of Madras, when a beam of large dimensions dims the ocular organ of Bengal."

SALE OF THE INDIAN COLLECTION OF CURIOSITIES OF THE LATE EARL CANNING.

In the course of the week the late Earl Canning's most valuable collection of Indian curiosities has been put up to public sale to the highest bidders. Though the particulars of the sale occupy an inconvenient space, we have judged it right to make way for them, as they will have a peculiar interest for our own circle of readers. Lord Canning's last testament was, we believe, a little wilful and capricious in some respects. He insisted most positively, for instance, on the absolute sale of this collection, giving no discretion on the subject to any one. Considering that the sale was a bonâ fide sale to the highest bidders, the prices the several articles fetched were very considerable. The first day's sale realised £2,000; the second, £3,000; the third, £3,775. 3s.; and the last two days upwards of £3,250. Total proceeds of the five days nearly £12,000.

SIR CHARLES MACARTHY.

It appears that Sir Charles Macarthy is as unpopular at Ceylon as Sir William Denison at Madras. The people complain that he is far too penurious as a Governor with respect to the necessary cost of public works, on which his predecessor, Sir Henry Ward, was so lavish in his expenditure. But it appears that Sir Henry Ward, in his eager zeal to benefit the country, overshot the right mark, and left behind him a load of debt which has put his successor into the unpopular position of one compelled to make severe retrenchments.

CALCUTTA PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.

THE inhabitants of Calcutta are continually complaining of the want of public amusements, and yet they often withhold their patronage when the servants of the public attempt to enliven the city with any novel entertainment. We could mention many instances of meritorious artistes who have found a visit to Calcutta anything but remunerative. The latest instance of the neglect of the community to avail themselves of such public amusements as may occasionally be available is that of a Mr. Johnstone, the aeronaut, who ruined himself by a costly attempt to gratify the people with his balloon ascent. It is said that the mere expense of landing his balloon amounted to £100. People waited outside in the streets or on the maidaun (or open plain, called "the lungs of Calcutta") to see the balloon ascend into the air above them, but declined to enter his enclosure and pay for seats. His ready cash was speedily exhausted, he got involved in debt, his health failed him, and, by the latest accounts, he was lying in a public hospital in a dying state. But the people of Calcutta are not hard-hearted nor illiberal when properly appealed to, and a subscription was raised to give him some chance of recovery by "creature comforts," or at least to ease his path to the grave, and show him that he was not altogether uncared for or left to die neglected in a foreign land.

THE MARATHA WEDDING.

WE have lately heard so much of all the ceremonies and splendours attendant upon a Royal Wedding at home, that our readers may have their minds disposed to hear of other weddings in other lands. A Colombo newspaper tells us of a wedding that lately took place there between a Mr. Charles Soya and a Miss Silva, who, though people of no very high social distinction, were married in some degree of state, and were honoured with the company to breakfast of a hundred respectable guests. They did not receive from their friends good wishes only, nor win from them golden opinions only, but had a shower of solid gold poured into their laps from a silver tray. There were not less than seven thousand five hundred pounds presented to them in this way, accompanied by the hearty congratulations of their friends.

THE "CEYLON PATRIOT."

"THERE are many things," says Bacon, "which a man cannot with any face or comeliness say or do of himself. A man can scarcely allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them. But things may be graceful in a friend's mouth which are blushing in a man's own." But then to repeat or publish them oneself is surely almost as bad as to utter them originally. A paper called the Ceylon Patriot has a complimentary correspondent, who tells the Editor, who again tells the public, that "he combines the comprehensive genius of a Flood, the more than mortal energy of a Grattan, the splendour of Burke, the boldness of Tell, and the sympathy of Howard." We shall again quote Lord Bacon, and tell the Editor of the Ceylon Patriot that "too much magnifying of man or matter doth irritate contradiction, and procure envy and scorn."

THE BISHOP OF COLOMBO.

THE Bishop of Natal has made some noise in the world by his free opinions, and now the Bishop of Colombo has some chance of attracting notice in England for a pamphlet which will be commended for its liberality by some, and severely censured on the same account by others. In the pamphlet alluded to the Bishop does not hesitate to avow that he should be "quite satisfied to see the minister of Christ supported by local contributions from his flock, in the manner which Scripture seems to indicate as best."

RUMOURED CHANGE OF THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT IN CEYLON.

THE Colombo Overland Observer of Feb. 16th mentions a rumour to the effect that Kandy is to be made the seat of Government, on account of its proximity to Trincomalee, which will be the port of call for mail steamers. This change, it is said, will take place as soon as the railway between Colombo and Kandy is constructed, and the line of electric telegraph completed. The rumour has been contradicted by some, and confirmed by others, but the change of the seat of Government is not generally deemed a very probable event.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 18.

OFFICERS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S ARMY.

Captain JERVIS asked the Secretary of State for India whether the Government had determined to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire whether the guarantee given to the officers of the late East India Company's Army by Parliament, by the Act of the 21st and 22nd of Victoria, cap. 105, and the 23rd and 24th of Victoria, cap. 100, had or had not been departed from.

Sir C. WOOD felt the importance of the subject which the gallant officer had given notice of his intention to bring before the House, but he thought the course proposed by the gallant officer of moving for a Select Committee of Inquiry exceedingly inconvenient, as likely to lead to great delay. He needed not to say that the object of himself and colleagues was faithfully to fulfil the pledges given by Parliament. There was no question of the disposition of the members of his Council, and especially the military members, to show every disposition in favour of their brethren in India, and he thought he should be able to satisfy the House that those pledges had not been in any way departed from; but as no person was the best judge of his own case, he thought it desirable that an inquiry should be carried out without delay. He had therefore recommended her Majesty to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the subject, which Commission would comprise members of both Houses of Parliament.

Sir M. FARQUHAR asked whether the Commission would consist of others besides members of Parliament?

Sir C. WOOD replied that what he stated was, that the Commission would comprise members of both Houses of Parliament.

In answer to a question from an hon. Member, Captain JERVIS said he could not withdraw his motion for a Select Committee on the subject, which stood for to-morrow, without distinct information as to what recommendations were to be made to the Commission, and how they were to be carried out.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 19.

THE ENGLISH NAVAL CONTINGENT IN CHINA.

Mr. ADDINGTON asked the Secretary to the Admiralty whether the officers of the Royal navy now in the service of the Emperor of China, had received permission from the Admiralty to wear the uniform of her Majesty's navy during the period of such service; and whether there would be any objection on the part of the Government to produce a copy of the instructions given to Commodore Sherard Osborn on his proceeding to China.

Lord C. PAGET had to state in reply that the officers who were about to serve the Chinese Government were not entitled to wear her Majesty's uniform. With respect to the second part of the question, he had to state that the Admiralty had issued no instructions whatever. Commodore Osborn would be absent on foreign leave from the Admiralty, and would retain his half-pay, and by an order in Council he and other officers would be allowed to serve in China.

Mr. ADDINGTON inquired whether the Royal naval uniform was worn by those officers.

Lord C. PAGET believed that the Emperor of China had established a naval uniform for his officers.

Mr. ADDINGTON asked whether these officers were now wearing the English uniform by direction of Commodore Osborn.

Lord C. PAGET replied that they were not entitled to do so.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE OF CEYLON.

Mr. LYALL called attention to the military expenditure for Ceylon, and asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies what steps had been taken in order to reduce the annual charge of £100,000 on the imperial exchequer for the troops in that island. The colony of Java yielded to the Dutch Government an annual tribute of no less than £3,000,000, but Ceylon, which was nearly as rich, cost this country no less than £120,000 a year. That large expenditure had been arranged when the circumstances of the island were far different. In 1854 the island was in debt, the district of Kandy was to a certain extent in a state of insubordination, and the revenue was only £408,000. Now the revenue had risen to £757,000, there was no debt, and Kandy was perfectly tranquil.

Mr. C. FORTESCUE had little to add to what he had said the other night on this subject. When the news of the hon. member's motion last year for annexing Ceylon to India went out, it caused the greatest dismay in the island; her Majesty's Government had lately received a petition from the Colonial Legislature entreating them not to consent to the proposal, and asserting that the country was at present perfectly well governed. The view her Majesty's Government took was that the Colonial Legislature were right in their wish to remain as they were; but her Majesty's Government had also taken occasion to represent to the colonists that if they so highly valued their direct connection with the mother country, they ought to be prepared to make some greater pecuniary sacrifice for the sake of retaining it; especially as the troops which were maintained there were chiefly employed in preserving internal order. It had been the intention of successive Governments, since the time of Lord Bathurst, that Ceylon should bear the greater part, or the whole burden of its military expenditure. The whole subject had been most thoroughly and carefully investigated by an able member of the Colonial office, and a despatch had been written to the governor, to prepare him for a considerably increased contribution to the military expenditure of the colony at once, and also for the prospect of a further increase at an early date.

THE INDIAN COLLECTION OF THE LATE EARL CANNING, K.G.

The sale of this highly important collection commenced on Monday, the 16th inst., at the rooms of Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods, in King-street, St. James's-square, and was numerously and fashionably attended.

FIRST DAY'S SALE.

The first day's sale was devoted to the brilliant assemblage of armour and arms, among which the following were the most remarkable specimens:—Swords, daggers, &c.—Lots 3-9. A Saintee spear, with chased and gilt handle, in two pieces; a tulwar, or scimitar, with Damascus blade, cased with metal, and inlaid with gold, in yellow velvet sheath; another, the hilt inlaid with gold, and green velvet sheath (from Oude); and two others, nearly similar, inlaid with silver and gold—£41. 10s. (Wells.) 14-16. A curious tulwar, or scimitar, with waved blade and double point, ivory handle, and leather sheath (from Peshawur); another, nearly similar; and a third, with beautiful Damascus blade, inscribed, the sheath and hilt metal-mounted and inlaid with gold—£30. (Wells.) 19. A khanda, the blade cased with metal, inlaid with gold, the hilt also inlaid with gold, set with turquoises and polished rubies, a splendid specimen, from Indore—£110. (Wells.) 20, 25, and 28. A koukree knife, with two small knives, in leather case, mounted with gold; a battle-axe, the handle inlaid with gold and spiral ornaments; and a beautiful dagger, with Damascus blade, the handle of jade, set with diamonds and rubies; the sheath also mounted with jade—£58. 10s. (Ditto and Russell). 33, 4, 7, 9. A mace, with steel point and metal guard, inlaid with gold; a dagger in sheath, covered with metal of beautiful open work; a kuttar, the handle and blade inlaid with gold, in velvet sheath, metal mounted; another of still more exquisite workmanship; and a third, with double blade and sheath, the handle chased with animals and gilt; from Delhi—£78 (Farrar). 48, 7, 61-62. A broadsword, with iron shield for the arm and hand, inlaid with gold, green velvet scabbard; a Walait knife, with damascus blade, metal handle, inlaid with gold; a tulwar or scimitar, with ivory hilt and leather sheath, mounted with enamel and white metal; and another with Damascus blade and hilt inlaid with gold; from Ghuznee—£56. 15s. (Ditto and Gibbons). 65 and 67. A very fine kuttar, with fluted blade, the hilt inlaid with gold, and velvet sheath; and another, the handle inlaid with gold; from Boorhampore—£52. 10s. (Wells). 69-71. MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LOSS OF THE "COLOMBO."—On the 18th instant, Mr. Selfe, police magistrate, and Captain Harris and Captain Baker, nautical assessors, attended at the Greenwich Police-court to express the opinion arrived at respecting an inquiry conducted by them on Thursday and Friday week, by direction of the Board of Trade, into the circumstances attending the loss of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's screw mail steamer Colombo, commanded by Captain Farquhar, on the Island of Minicoy, in the Arabian Sea, on the 19th of November last. The court was unanimous in its opinion. The principal point for its consideration was the cause of the vessel being wrecked on the island, which is thirty-two miles to the northward of the supposed position of the ship at the time she struck, at 6.20 in the morning, and within seven or eight minutes after land was first sighted. Agreeing with the allowance made for lateral currents by Captain Farquhar on leaving Point de Galle on the afternoon of the 17th of November, the court was of opinion that such an extraordinary deviation as thirty-two miles to the northward of the supposed position of the vessel could only be ascribed to the influence of an unusually strong current. It had since been ascertained in this country, from a pamphlet published by Professor Ferguson, of the Indian navy, and in charge of the Observatory at Bombay, that a cyclone, or rotary storm, was prevailing to the north-west of Minicoy, and to it was to be attributed this extraordinary current, which no amount of precaution could have guarded against. This severe cyclone, which had been traced in its course and limits by Professor Ferguson, seemed to have commenced in the Arabian Sea, travelling at a rate of seven miles an hour in a N.N.E. direction, and would have passed on the 19th of November (the day of the wreck) about 104 miles to the westward of Minicoy. From the loss of the Colombo it was known that no cyclone had actually prevailed at that island, although, after the ship struck, the wind, which had previously been E.S.E. to S.E., shifted to S.S.W., blowing a fresh gale, thus confirming Professor Ferguson's calculations, derived from the logbooks of twenty-seven vessels which had been more or less within the influence of the cyclone; that it passed to the westward of Minicoy, and was then travelling to the northward and eastward. Professor Ferguson, in his pamphlet, made this remark:—"I am very much afraid that the remarkably suspicious swell that preceded and followed this cyclone was, in some measure, connected with the loss of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Colombo on Minicoy Island, at daylight on the 19th of November." In returning to Captain Farquhar his certificate, the Court expressed an opinion that the conduct of the engineer in charge at the time of the wreck had been neglectful in not throwing off the expansion gear on receiving the order, just previous to the vessel striking, to "turn astern full speed," by which two or three minutes of precious time were lost, although it did not appear in evidence that the wreck would have been avoided had the order been instantly obeyed. The Court also expressed its approbation of the conduct of Captain Farquhar, and his officers and crew, in saving the lives of the whole of the passengers, and recovering the mails and the cargo on board.

Bombay Estab.—Capt. H. L. Robinson, Staff Corps.

SIR CHARLES JACKSON.—This estimable man leaves Calcutta by the next mail steamer. An able and learned judge, an honourable member of society, and an honest-hearted truly benevolent and religious English gentleman thus bids farewell to a country in which, for a goodly number of years, he has discharged the functions of the bench with great zeal, ability and integrity, and we will add, with the utmost clemency compatible with a due administration of the law and the interests of the public. The name of Sir Charles Jackson has ever, during his residence in India, been associated with our charitable institutions, and of him it cannot be said that well off himself he had neither thought nor helping hand for the unfortunate. On the contrary, we believe we do not err when we write that a marked characteristic of Sir Charles Jackson has been practical benevolence. Of the learned judge's independence and public spiritedness we need not speak. Is there to be no farewell address.—Phoenix, Feb. 12.

MR. FORSYTH has taken charge of the office of Secretary to the Governor of the Punjab from Mr. Davis, who proceeds forthwith to Calcutta to embark for England.

THE railway was opened to Allyghur by the Lieutenant-governor, on Saturday, the 21st Feb.

Each Young Lady is requested to bring a Silver Fork, Desert Spoon (which will be returned), and Six Towels.
A Quarter's Notice is requested previously to the removal of a Pupil.
The Misses WINTERBOTTOM can give most unexceptionable references.

A LADY, who has for many years conducted a superior School, will be happy to RECEIVE into her Establishment YOUNG LADIES from India or the Colonies. The system of Education is based on the modern and intelligent plan of cultivating the understanding rather than crowding the memory. To those who value thorough Christian principles, combined with home comforts and a superior Education, this Establishment can be highly recommended. Testimonials from ministers and others.
For further particulars apply to Miss MASON, Agency for the Employment of Ladies, 12, Cranley-terrace, Fulham-road, London, S.W.

A WIDOW LADY, residing in the best and most healthy part of Notting-hill, RECEIVES a few YOUNG LADIES to Educate with her own Children, upon moderate terms. Parents residing abroad are assured that every endeavour will be made to promote the comfort and happiness of a home with the advantages of a School. From the proximity of Notting-hill to the West-end of London, the most accomplished professors of music, drawing, &c., can be engaged, when required, upon moderate terms.
Address Mrs. BLAIR LEIGHTON, Lansdowne-crescent, Notting-hill. References: Professor FARADAY, D.C.L., &c., &c., Royal Institution of Great Britain, London; and Messrs. BOOSEY and SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street.

MILITARY EDUCATION.—The Rev.

CHARLES J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wrangler, Cambridge, 1852), Rector of Perrivale (population 32), begs to inform his Friends that he has REMOVED from the Finchley-road to his Residence (built expressly for him), CASTLEBAR-COURT, EALING, W., where he receives both Senior and Junior Pupils to prepare for the Army, Military Colleges, and the Civil Service.

MILITARY and NAVAL EDUCATION.—

A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R. Young, formerly of Belfast College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute. Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.
Address, "ALLY," care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

A LADY can strongly recommend an EUROPEAN FEMALE SERVANT, who is accustomed to the care of children, and who wishes to RETURN to Calcutta about the end of April, or in May.
For further particulars apply to C. W. H., care of Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co., 65, Cornhill, London, E.C.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

THE BEAUTIES of the EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patronesses that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARA-TIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes—fac simile of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugénie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty.—Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

NOTHING IMPOSSIBLE.—The greatest and most useful invention of the day, AQUA AMA-RILLA.—Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL and Co., Three King-court, Lombard-street, Perfumers to her Majesty, respectfully offer to the public this truly marvellous fluid, which gradually restores the human hair to its pristine hue—no matter at what age. The Aqua Amarella has none of the properties of dyes; it, on the contrary, is beneficial to the system, and when the hair is once restored one application per month will keep it in perfect colour. Price one guinea per bottle.

 MOLLARD'S PERFUMED TOILET SULPHUR SOAP and CREAM, entirely free from any unpleasant smell, and are sovereign remedies against fever, local or chronic cutaneous eruptions, rheumatism, pains in the joints, &c. The Cream possesses all the properties of the renowned Bâroge Waters for baths. Recommended by the most eminent physicians.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.
 It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinoidin.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for it taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in mint, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Leicester street, London, W.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words
 "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraven on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND.

THIS UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced.
 For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-

MILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1d. 3s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.
 It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 173, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

BEWARE NOT.—Though surrounded by circumstances disadvantageous to health, these remedies, properly applied, will cut short fevers, influenza, inflammation, diphtheria, and a host of other complaints always lurking about to seize on the weak, forlorn, or unwary. The superiority of Holloway's Medicines over others for subduing disease has been so widely and fully proved that it is only necessary to ask the afflicted to give them a trial, and if the instructions folded round them be followed, no disappointment can ever ensue, no dangerous consequences result. In hoarseness and ulcerated sore throat the Ointment should be frequently rubbed on the neck and top of the chest. It will arrest the increasing inflammation, allay disquietude, and gradually cure.

Now ready, price 6s., or by post, 6s. 6d.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of those countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenaeum, March 21, 1863.

"It is a work which politicians, journalists, and all men of general information cannot at this juncture well do without."—Literary Times, March 21, 1863.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

LORD ELGIN was still proceeding on his tour through the Upper Provinces. Before he returns to the Bengal presidency he will have seen a great deal of the country which he has undertaken to govern. By next cold season it is supposed the railway will be finished to Delhi, and if his lordship returns to Calcutta in 1865 he will find (says the Friend of India) every point from Mooltan and Bombay to Nagpore and the Bay of Bengal accessible by railway.

Our intelligence from Jynteah is to the effect that Oakiang Nungba, the principal rebel leader, has been arrested and executed. This summary proceeding has spread terror among the rebels, and will, we trust, be a salutary lesson. The reward of Rs. 1,000, which was offered for his apprehension, has been paid to the parties who captured him. The stockades at Oomkai and Oomkiong have been destroyed. The 28th N.I., now in the Cossyah Hills, is to be relieved in the beginning of next month. An engagement had taken place between a body of police and the rebels, in which the latter were defeated.

Sir Charles Trevelyan is still hard at work in the preparation of his Budget, and has called upon Madras and Bombay to furnish him with financial statements respecting those presidencies. Sir Charles contemplates the amalgamation of the various finance departments.

The members of the Legislative Council of Madras have been a little mortified by finding the measures [that were approved and passed relating to the pier and the management of boats and catamarans, subjects on which they ought to have some local knowledge, utterly disallowed by the Governor-general. The objection to them is the fact that they make certain offences punishable in a way somewhat different from that provided by the regulations of the Penal Code.

Prince Mahomed Fuckerodeen, one of the Mysore Royal family, has forfeited his protection order in the Calcutta Insolvent Court by a gross breach of his most solemn promise to settle with his creditors, which he was enabled to do by his share of that large grant to his family, which created so much dissatisfaction in the European community of India. The Judge complained that the Prince had behaved in a most improper manner, and that instead of paying off his debts, had spent his share of the grant in festivities of all kinds.

On the 18th of February the Honourable Mr. Harrington moved for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the speedy adjudication of claims to waste lands. The Bill proposes that all such claims should be decided by a special Court, consisting of three judges. The decision of the Court is to be final. The motion was agreed to.

We regret to hear of the death of Sir William Stevenson, K.C.B., Governor of the Mauritius. He had filled his post with credit for five years. He died at Reduit on the evening of the 10th January.

We perceive that the "non-regulation district" of Darjeeling is to participate in the Act for simplifying the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature, commonly called the Civil Procedure Code.

Reports from the opium districts have been received up to the 10th instant, stating the prospects of the season to be very promising. The rain which fell in January, though rather too heavy in one or two districts, has, notwithstanding, been productive of much benefit generally, and though there may not be a bumper crop, there is every reason to expect a good average one, which, from the extent of land under cultivation, would be from 46,000 to 50,000 chests.

A very curious case connected with the question of the transfer of India from the late East India Company to the Crown has just occurred. Major F. C. Salisbury, formerly of the 1st Bengal Fusiliers, and of H.M.'s 101st Royal Fusiliers, had written to the directors of the Bengal Military Fund, declining to pay any further subscriptions to the Fund, on the grounds that he no longer belonged to the Indian Army; that the Government which had ordered him to subscribe as a condition of entrance into its service was no more; and that, in fine, he was no longer a Company's or Indian officer, but an officer of one of H.M.'s British line regiments, and as such absolved from all obligation of belonging or subscribing to the institution in question. The local authorities at once pointed out to Major Salisbury that his view of the question was entirely a mistake, and have compelled him to continue his subscription to the Fund. The case is to be referred, however, for final decision, to the Secretary of State for India.

It is said that the costly economy of the Military Finance Department will soon be got rid of altogether, and that its duties will be transferred to the office of the Military Accountant to the Government of India. The Military Finance Department, intended to diminish expenditure, is itself maintained at an expense of two lakhs a year.

The High Court of Madras has affirmed the judgments on the Satapoor murder case. The Ranees and two others are to be hanged. The Ranees had caused a poor dancing girl to be murdered. An appeal was made in her favour to the Government, but the decision of the law was upheld, and the natives will have an opportunity of learning that British justice recognises no distinction of rank.

The question of taxes on tobacco and betel in the provinces of Central India has been for some time under the consideration of the Government of India. These taxes could be very easily and economically collected. It is believed, however, that the Viceroy is averse, for some reason not explained, to these taxes being imposed at the present time.

It has been proposed to erect a new town at Konay, in North Canara, and to make it the head-quarters station of the district. The Bombay Government engaged Captain Baker, of the Engineers, to line out the town, and his plan was approved of by some of the authorities, but the Chief Engineer complained that he had not been consulted by Captain Baker, and finally objected to the plan as it stood. With some modifications, however, we suppose it will be at last adopted, for the Government of Bombay is apparently most anxious to have the undertaking expedited, let the expense be what it may, as may be gathered from the following paragraphs (Nos. 10 and 11) from a resolution passed on the 15th of September of 1862:—

"A cotton crop far larger and more valuable than any which has ever yet been grown in the Southern Mahratta country is now growing, and will be ready for exportation before the end of the season. The money value of this crop to India is very great, but its value to England cannot be told in money, and every additional thousand bales which we can get down to the sea coast before the season closes in June may not only save scores of weavers from starvation or crime, but may play no unimportant part in ensuring peace and prosperity to the manufacturing districts of more than one country in Europe.

"These are not considerations to be weighed against improved gradients, or even a few miles more or less of road to be made. Government know that by the lines on which Captain Baker proposes to work cotton carts can travel and have travelled, and that by the work which he proposes to do these roads can be greatly improved, secured, and made still more easy for cart traffic. The utmost which he can fairly spend upon them during this season will be repaid, and more than repaid, by the results of this very season, without looking to future years."

Mr. Edward Levinge, of the Irish bar, has succeeded Sir Charles Jackson in the High Court of Bengal. Mr. Levinge is the author of "The Irish Justice of the Peace," said to be a work of merit.

Enquiries have been made of us if there is to be any change made in the Indian Ecclesiastical Establishments. We can assure our readers that, certainly for the present, no alteration in the ecclesiastical regulations is contemplated.

The Great India Peninsular Railway Company proposed some time back to make Hyderabad the terminus of the Madras and Bombay Railways. The Government have just directed a survey to be made of the country between Gooty and Hyderabad via Kurnool, with a view to acceding to the proposition.

BENGAL.

(FROM OUR "SPECIAL GRIFF.")

AGRA, Feb. 18.—Surprise is the chronic mental state of griffinhood, so that no essential change has been wrought in the mind of this particular griff by the intelligence he has just received that in the opinion of the standing counsel to Government it is criminal under section 449 of the Penal Code to speak the naked truth about the political relations of such native families as that of Mysore with the ruling power in India. His prospects of acquaintance with No. 1 Chowringhee, at the instance of "our friend" of Russapuglah, are so very remote that they have not disturbed his enjoyment of the grandeur and gaieties of Agra during the Governor-general's stay there, which stay will end by the departure of the camp tomorrow morning, (Thursday, 19th instant,) on the first march towards Muttra, where they will halt for the 21st and 22nd instant; thence for Delhi, where the 3rd and 4th of March are to be spent; and Meerut will be the next principal point where receptions will be held, from the 7th to the 9th instant. Before this reaches Calcutta, it will have become known to all that Mr. H. B. Harrington is the successor of Mr. Edmonstone in the government of the North-West. Of course, in the crowds of civilians who have come together in this tour to meet his Excellency, the question of this succession has been generally and anxiously discussed, and from those discussions it is clear that, in selecting Mr. Harrington as the best and fittest man for the high honour of that important post, Lord Elgin's opinion will be endorsed by the large majority of officials, and the new Lieutenant-Governor will have a more popular reception than would any of the gentlemen named in competition with him by the various newspapers, whose wishes were fathers to their confidently expressed thoughts on the matter. Griffs have no business to have any opinions, or there might be some room here for saying, that whilst holding Mr. Harrington's qualifications as a statesman in no very high estimation, there is no doubt that he is a "safe" man for such a post at such a time as the present; that he is an exact and diligent man of business, and thoroughly conversant with the routine thereof; that even a little personal acquaintance with the North-West proves the soundness of Mr. Harrington's dictum in his place in Council two years ago, "that the one thing needed for the country is rest;" that it is quite certain it will have rest under the rule of a Governor whose leading principle is declared, quies non movet; and, finally, that now Mr. Maine has taken his place in Council Mr. Harrington will be much more useful, and less in the way as a negative lieutenant-governor than as the obstructive member in the Supreme Council. Talking of lieutenant-governors, it is to be hoped that misprints are not punishable as constructive petit-treason or something of that sort, under section something of that all-comprehensive Penal Code; otherwise, like poor Richard de Birchington in the Ingoldsby Legends,

"Our griff may get punished for P.D.'s offences."

In his report of Mr. Beadon's speech at Benares he wrote that gentleman down as saying he returned thanks "not for the covenanted only, but for military and all other servants in the civil employment," or to that effect. Now, you have printed it without the essential word "only," and, as you will see, have thereby made a very nice mess of it, of which your readers ought to hear something emphatic. Mr. Davies, the Secretary to the Punjab Government, is here, en route to England, on six months leave, Mr. Forsyth acting for him; and from the same province Mr. Reginald Saunders, the Post-master-general, is going home on furlough, whom it is said by some "who ought to know," Mr. J. W. S. Wyllie to succeed. But it is time to return to the Viceroy, who, in our last, was left feeding at an official dinner-party on the Friday night, with a day's work of private receptions before him on the following day. The innocent sleep of griffinhood was broken at an untimely hour by unearthly noises which resolved themselves, waking sense returned, into the trumpeting of elephants, the groans of camels, the neighing of horses, and the screams of syces and drivers, who, being under orders for processionising at noon, were having a preliminary little-go of their own before breakfast. General result, dust enough to suffocate any but seasoned North-western residents. Knowing that the several chiefs were making strenuous efforts to outvie each other in the extent and splendour of their followings, we took an early turn to see how the land lay. Coming in the early morning upon the enormous camp, in which the Governor-general's canvass town formed but a moderate item, the scene was a striking one. Every kind of tent was spread over square miles of encamping ground, with every kind of cookery going on in their neighbourhood, and the undress of every variety of Central and North-west Indian tribe showed at least two points of unity, dirt and simplicity of design, the Calcutta bazaar morning costume, of a piece of string with a bow to it, being predominant among the rising generations. On every side spread the separate camps of the native potentates, contrasting in their varieties of disorder with the trim neatness of the Viceroy's central square of tentage, approached by a long and wide screen of tents, the dwellings and offices of the staff. In spite of every effort of the Government and the respective agents, every chief of any pretensions has brought in a following far beyond their own requirements and the instructions laid down for them. It is estimated that not less than one hundred and twenty thousand natives, foreign to the place, are in the numberless camps, and that estimate is probably within the mark. The confusion that results may be imagined but not described, the pressure upon every necessary of life and every convenience of the civilized portion of the visitors and residents is very trying, and the station of Agra longs for it all to be well over and the ragamuffin mob got rid of. On Saturday seven of the principal chiefs were received in private durbar, commencing at ten o'clock with the Maha Rajah Scindia, who has a splendid house here, and alone had asked and obtained permission to come in his carriage and four. The rest came up with splendid retinues, some of them really well got up and well ordered, others a mere tawdry and disorderly multitude. At the corner of the line of approach we saw the Bhurtpore sowaree, and noted it as a fair specimen of the better class. First came two empty carriages, each with four horses, preceding a very fine elephant carrying three men in charge of a great golden standard; the effect of the glittering silver grey of the immense standard bearer's clothing brought out against the sun-lit flag and the scarlet and green of the animal's trappings, made up one of those wonderful bits of colouring which only the East can show. Then came forty mounted sowars in blue, then elephants in scarlet and green, elephants in purple and gold, in green and silver, in every colour of the rainbow; with gilded howdahs, with silver howdahs, howdahs like phæton bodies, howdahs with awnings, with golden umbrellas, with bullion fringes, with nothing but rags and tatters, sixteen elephants in that group, then four camels, with new trappings; three more elephants in scarlet and gold with double howdahs, two young swells on horseback, twenty sowars in "assorted colours," two elephants with great pads, silver spangled, a camel carriage and four, a pair of sowarrie camels, one of them furious and covered with foam all down his long neck; sixteen led horses in splendid jingling trappings—the horses themselves invisible under their load of ornament; a camel gun; fifty sowars, scarlet and green; the Political Agent driving his mail phæton; camel sowars; an immense elephant with a pair of kettle drums, each about the size of a fair dining table; twenty footmen running in advance of a large litter; twelve more led horses with trappings; two camel guns; an elephant, a camel, and a crowd of runners in such a cloud of dust that one could only see a scrimmage of some sort was going on without any cessation of their advance; two great horses, over sixteen hands high, drawing some nondescript cart; camels again; then a great shouting, and a carriage well appointed with four good cream-coloured horses, and that is the chief, a bright clever lad of some twelve years or so, speaking English fluently, and showing a strong inclination to do well under the excellent guidance of the Political Resident; then two more carriages and four, with his principal retainers; fifty more sowars; two more camels; one more great male elephant in gold clothing; and that, with unlimited dust, noise and general higgledy-piggledy, is the Rajah, as he goes in state to wait upon the Governor-general. As we arrived at the end of the broad camp-street, leading up to the durbar tent, another very brilliantly appointed cortège, all on elephants and camels, was coming up from another direction, so we waited to see the ceremonial of the reception. The street itself was lined with the irregular cavalry, and on each side of the approach to it was a line of elephants, of which above two hundred are in the Viceroy's camp; the grass had been well watered, and the street was kept entirely clear; in front of the durbar tent floated the great standard, and the Rifles furnished the guard of honour and the band for the receptions. Here come the Under-Secretary of the Foreign Department and the Political Agent, on elephants, who proceed to a certain distance to meet the approaching visitor; after compliments the whole advance to the entrance of the tent, where they are met by the Foreign Secretary and the Governor-general's agent: the visitor descends from the elephant and enters an open litter, and thence to the ground. The Secretary and the Agent take each a hand, and the visitor is led into the presence of the Viceroy, who has a quarter of an hour's talk and interchange of civilities, and the visitor retires with equally punctilious ceremonial. Here they come, and the curious character of the head-dress and the garments of gold embroidery puzzle the spectator until he sees that it is a woman, wearing the Star of India. The Secunder Begum of Bhopal, whose self-sacrificing loyalty and personal services in the mutinies, and her resolute stand against the prejudices of her race in her conduct ever since, entitle her to the respect and moral support of every Englishman. And so she departs laughing and chatting with her European companions; some sixteen elephants in one compact mass of glitter and brilliant colours going down in the sunshine, a picture whose life and splendour even a Turner could not fix upon canvas. The ceremonial of one reception is that of all, except that, as you were advised by telegram, the Viceroy announced to the Nawab of Rampore, during his reception, that he had been selected to the honour of a seat in the Supreme Council, in place of the late Maharaja of Puttiala. The Nawab's excellent services in the mutinies had already been rewarded with the Star of India, and his consideration among the Mahomedan people, his moderation of conduct, and steady loyalty since then, render the selection an altogether unexceptionable one, granting that the native element in the Governor-general's Council is desirable. In person and feature his Highness is a stout, elderly, grave-looking man, with a certain dignity in his bearing, and reminding one much of the great Dan O'Connell, if one could fancy the great Dan in the Nawab's head-dress. During Saturday and Monday the following chiefs had the honour of the private reception:—

Maharajah Seindia, Maharajah of Jeypore, Begum of Bhopal, Maharajah of Boondee, Maharajah of Bhurtore, Chief of Kotah, Chief of Ulwar, Nawab of Tonk, Maharajah of Dholepore, Maharajah of Jahlawar, Nawab of Rampore, Maharajah of Duttea, Maharajah of Cheerkaree, Rajah of Chutterpore, Rajah Surenlejut Sing of Baroda, Rajah of Kothee, Jageerdar of Logassee, Jageerdar of Allipoora, and Jageerdar of Gouribar.

Sunday was a welcome intervening day of rest for the very hard-working Viceregal personages and the Staff, and on Tuesday came the long looked-for grand durbar—much too grand an occasion to stuff into the end of a long letter, the more especially as there must also be some accounts of the less stately visits of the strangers to the wonderful Taj Mehal. But the speech of his Excellency to the assembled chiefs expressed to them collectively the sentiments with which he had welcomed them individually, and comes fitly in connection with their more important private reception. This was as follows:—

"PRINCES AND CHIEFS,—In inviting you to meet me here, it was my wish in the first place to become acquainted with you personally, and also to convey to you, in obedience to the gracious command which I received from her Majesty the Queen upon my departure from England, the assurance of the deep interest which her Majesty takes in the welfare of the Chiefs of India. I have now to thank you for the alacrity with which, in compliance with my request, you have, many of you from considerable distances, assembled at this place.

"Having received during the course of the last few days many of the principal personages among you in private durbar, where I have had the opportunity of communicating my views on matters of interest and importance, I need not detain you on this occasion by many words.

"Before taking leave of you, however, I desire to address to you collectively a few general remarks upon the present state of affairs in India, and upon the duties which that state of affairs imposes upon us all.

"Peace, I need hardly remind you of the fact, now happily prevails throughout the whole extent of this vast empire, domestic treason has been crushed, and foreign enemies have been taught to respect the power of the arms of England. The British Government is desirous to take advantage of this favourable opportunity, not to extend the bounds of its dominions, but to develop the resources and draw forth the natural wealth of India, and thus to promote the well-being and happiness both of rulers and of the people.

"With this view many measures of improvement and progress have already been introduced, and among them I may name, as most conspicuous, the railway and electric telegraph,—those great discoveries of this age which have so largely increased the wealth and power of the mightiest nations of the West.

"By diffusing education among your vassals and dependents, establishing schools, promoting the construction of good roads, and suppressing, with the whole weight of your authority and influence, barbarous usages and crimes, such as infanticide, suttee, thuggee and dacoitee, you may, Princes and Chiefs, effectually second these endeavours of the British Government, and secure for yourselves and your people a full share of the benefits which the measures to which I have alluded are calculated to confer upon you. I have observed with satisfaction the steps which many of you have already taken in this direction, and more especially the enlightened policy which has induced some of you to remove transit and other duties, which obstructed the free course of commerce through your States.

"As representing the paramount power, it is my duty to keep the peace in India; for this purpose her Majesty the Queen has placed at my disposal a large and gallant army, which, if the necessity should arise, I shall not hesitate to employ for the repression of disorder and the punishment of any who may be rash enough to disturb the general tranquillity. But it is also my duty to extend the hand of encouragement and friendship to all who labour for the good of India, and to assure you that the chiefs who make their own dependents contented and prosperous, establish thereby the strongest claim on the favour and protection of the British Government.

"I bid you now, princes and chiefs, farewell for a time, with the expression of my earnest hope that, on your return to your homes, health and happiness may attend you."

The rest of my Agra notes must be reserved for another sketch. For the present, the guns are announcing every few minutes the return visits paid by the Viceroy to those whom he had received as above. The camp is in a state of vigorous packing, and the clouded sky and lowering atmosphere seem rather to threaten a wet march for his Excellency to commence with.—Englishman, Feb. 22.

SPEECH OF THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL AT THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY DINNER.

The Lieut.-governor of Bengal said: The toast which has been allotted to me, and which I give with sincere and heartfelt pleasure, is "The Health of the Chief Engineers of the Railway and their Staff." I say with pleasure, because it cannot be otherwise than a pleasure to assist prominently in doing honour to men who have so eminently done their duty, and through whose means it is that we are here assembled to celebrate the completion of a great work; but, at the same time, I must regret that it has fallen to me to propose this toast, because I feel myself quite incapable of doing justice to it. The toast, however, will stand upon its own intrinsic merits, and needs no words from me to recommend it to your cordial, your enthusiastic acceptance. In these days of progress, we are so much accustomed to witness the triumphs of engineering science, and the achievement of great works which half a generation ago were thought impracticable,—we have come to think it so much a matter of course that when a railway is wanted it will be made, and that when once undertaken it will in due time be finished, whatever be the difficulties and obstacles that impede its execution, and we hear the language of important criticism so much more frequently and loudly expressed than the voice of encouragement and praise—that we are apt to lose sight of the real glory of such a work as this, and, in the complacent satisfaction we derive from its possession and use, to forget the masterly skill, the fertile resource, the indomitable energy, of those who designed and brought it to perfection. But, on an occasion like this, when we are met together under the auspices of the ruler of the land—the noble and distinguished Viceroy and representative of our gracious Queen—who has ever been remarkable for his enlightened advocacy and patronage of useful and industrial enterprise, and whose confidence it is my highest honour to enjoy,—when we are met together under such auspices to mark the completion of the great artery of communication between the metropolis and the North-West Provinces, and the first main link in the system of railways with which the whole continent of India will, sooner or later, be reticulated,—of a work which has already begun to bear abundant fruit, and which, whether in its structural completeness, or in its political, commercial, and social importance, is unsurpassed by any railway in the world—it is right, I say, that those who have hitherto wrought bravely and unflinchingly towards the accomplishment of this great object, in spite of difficulties which on the whole are perhaps unequalled in the annals of engineering, should, on the conclusion of their labours, be crowned with their full meed of praise, and that in addition to the high consciousness of having done their duty, and done it well, they should be unmistakably assured that their labours are appreciated, and that they have earned the approbation and gratitude of their fellow countrymen. And, indeed, it is difficult to say which is the more deserving of our admiration—the work itself which most of us had the opportunity of seeing yesterday, or the skill and perseverance of those by whom it was planned and executed. To those who can remember the time, now nearly twenty years ago, when the question of railways in India was first practically taken up by Sir Macdonald Stephenson, and the almost contemptuous reception with which the proposal to construct them was met, it must seem, as it does to me, little short of a miracle that what was then deemed by high authority to be a chimera, should now be an accomplished fact. The objections made to the undertaking were indeed for the most part frivolous enough, such, for instance, as that white ants would eat the sleepers—that the rains would wash away the embankments—that rust would corrode the rails—that the sun would scorch the passengers—and, above all, that the natives could never be persuaded to ride in the carriages; but there were also grave and serious doubts as to the success of the scheme which required nerve to solve, and it is owing, I think, a good deal to the fact that the real difficulties and the actual cost of the undertaking were not half foreseen, that we have a railway at all; for if they had been foreseen, while yet the enormous traffic which the railway has attracted to itself even in its infancy was wholly unlooked for, our meeting to-day would more probably have been held in a different place to see the first sod turned, than to celebrate the opening of the line to Benares, a distance of some 550 miles, and the completion of a further distance of some 300 miles from Allahabad to the North West. But all these difficulties have been successfully overcome by the ability and unwearied exertions of the engineers, and though the cost has been far greater than was anticipated, we are in possession of a railway, which in point of construction may vie with any in the world, and which promises in a short time to be as profitable as a commercial enterprise, as it has been already productive of boundless advantage both to the Government and to the people. I will now with your permission allude briefly to some salient facts connected with the construction of this line, which, though well known to some of you, may be instructive to others, and which will serve to show the magnitude of the work, and the difficulties by which its execution has been beset. The railway was proposed in 1844, and the subject was strongly recommended to the favourable consideration of the Court of Directors. The Court, though gravely stating the objections to the scheme, some of which I have alluded to, nevertheless sent out an experienced engineer, by whom levels were taken on the direct route from Calcutta to Mirzapore, and a favourable report made; but nothing was practically done, and the matter slept for nearly five years, when the project was revived by Lord Dalhousie, and encouraged by the promise of a State guarantee, Mr. Turnbull, who had been sent out by the newly formed railway company, proposed an experimental line to Raneegunge, pending the settlement of the question whether the main line should run direct to Mirzapore or by the Ganges Valley. This was agreed to; the work was begun in 1851, and the line was opened to Pundooah (37 miles) in September, 1854, and to Raneegunge (121 miles) in February, 1855. In March, 1853, Colonel Baker and Mr. Turnbull reported in favour of the Ganges Valley line, and this deviation from the original project was sanctioned by Lord Dalhousie, as likely to open up the great marts of commerce in Bengal and Behar. Not that it was not felt at that time that a direct line might eventually be required, but the Ganges line was selected as the one most promising as a paying mercantile speculation. And for my own part, though I do not question the soundness of the decision then arrived at, I cannot doubt that before long a direct line will be made, for I do not believe that the people of the North-west will patiently endure a line which adds 100 miles to their natural distance from Calcutta, and saddles with a proportionate extra cost every ton of goods sent from Benares to the seaport. The work was begun and carried on under Mr. Turnbull's management; it was opened to the River Adjai in October, 1858; to Rajmahal in October, 1860; to Bhagulpore in November, 1861; and to Monghyr in February, 1862; and finally it was extended across the Kurrumnassa, the boundary of the two lieutenant-governorships, and opened to Benares in December, 1862. The line being carried along the banks of the Bhagiruttee and Ganges, all the affluents of these great rivers had to be crossed by vast bridges, and very heavy works. The principal of these are the Adjai-bridge, 1,800 yards long, about double the length of London-bridge, the More-bridge, almost as large, the bridges over the Brahminee, Banstai, and Gomancee,—the costly works between Colgong and Bhagulpore, where the country is annually inundated to a considerable depth,—the tunnel through the quartz rock at Monghyr,—the Kuol-bridge, with its 9 spans of 150 feet each,—and the Hulohar-bridge, with its 4 spans of the same size, resting on piers whose foundations are 55 feet below low-water level, and its auxiliary arches, no less than 631 in number to carry off the drainage water which in flood time is 10 miles wide, with a depth near the river of 9 feet. Then comes the Soane-bridge, the largest and most important work of all, with 28 spans of 150 feet each, and nearly a mile in length, including the abutments; and lastly, the heavy works near the Soane and the Kurrumnassa-bridge, consisting of 13 arches of 40 feet span, and about to be enlarged. The chief difficulties, besides those of construction, which impeded the progress of the work were its magnitude and novelty, and the impossibility, for some time, of obtaining a sufficient supply of skilled labour, and, indeed, in some important places, of any labour at all; the Sonthal insurrection, which interrupted the works for a whole season; the unhealthiness of the country, especially near the base of the Rajmahal Hills, causing great sickness and mortality among the engineers and the labourers, and frequent desertion of the latter; the failure of contractors, owing to the enormous rise in wages, and in the price of all commodities, whereby all calculations were falsified; and, more than all, the mutinies which for two full years put a stop to all progress above Monghyr, and caused the destruction of much valuable property, including twice the preparatory works at the Soane bridge. All the works on the line were designed, superintended, and carried out by Mr. Turnbull, and by his able assistants. What, then, shall we say of the men to whom we are indebted for the accomplishment of these great results, in the face of such formidable opposing circumstances? Of Mr. Turnbull, on whom the Governor-general has just passed a deserved encomium, I will only add that, in my opinion, he has deserved well of his country, and has earned a high place in that illustrious line of British engineers which the names of Brindley and Stephenson adorn. It has already been my good fortune to bring Mr. Turnbull's name officially and prominently to the notice of the Governor-general in Council in connection with the completion of the Bengal division of the railway, and I now call upon you to join me in expressing our hearty approval of his eminent services. In regard to Mr. Sibley, the architect of the Adjai and More bridges, and now the chief engineer of the North-west division, and to Mr. Purcell, to whom we owe those elegant and substantial bridges which span the stream of the Kuol and the floods of the Hulohar—their works speak for them. They are both entitled to our cordial thanks and acknowledgments. Our special thanks are also due to Mr. Power, who built the greater part of the Soane Bridge—that magnificent structure upon which we have gazed with admiration, if not with awe; and to Mr. Schmidt, who completed it. As you have already been reminded, it is the longest bridge in existence, save one, and may well be regarded as one of the wonders of the world. Mr. Power has now been appointed to succeed Mr. Turnbull as chief engineer of the Bengal division, and will, I have no doubt, emulate the example of his honoured predecessor. Mr. Schmidt, whose personal activity and devotion under great physical deprivation and suffering I myself witnessed, is, I believe, a gentleman of foreign extraction, if not of foreign birth; but if we call him an Englishman, we pay a compliment to ourselves rather than to him. And now I have done. I can only beg that my imperfect advocacy may not in the least degree impair the warmth with which you join me in drinking health and prosperity to the engineers of the East India Railway.

Mr. Sibley, in returning thanks on behalf of the engineering staff in the N. W. Provinces, said:—Sir, my lord and gentlemen,—On behalf of the engineering staff in the North-West Provinces, I rise to acknowledge the honour which has been done to us. We of the North-West can claim but a tithe, and that a very easy tithe, of that portion of the line in celebration of the opening of which we are met to-day, and I should feel more diffident did our claim to thanks rest on that alone; but, as has been stated, we have 280 miles of opened line in operation from Allahabad to Agra, which will be extended, in, I hope, the course of a few weeks by fifty miles to Allyghur. Thenceforward to Gazeed-oodeen-nuggur, the first station on this side of Delhi, the line is ready for the permanent way, awaiting only sleepers. Again, from hence to the Jumna at Allahabad the line is ready for the permanent way, except only the Touse Bridge, and the girders of the Kudjoree Bridge, near Mirzapore, now in course of erection. The supply of timber sleepers has been, and will probably continue to be, a main difficulty, which may perhaps even-tuate in our substituting wrought-iron bearers. Should materials arrive in time this year, 1863 may yet see a train leaving the banks of the Hooghly at Calcutta, and running with one solitary break at the Jumna at Allahabad to the hither bank of the Jumna at Delhi. The public has at times exhibited an impatience which was not unnatural, but which I may term, I hope without offence, an "uninformed" impatience. Accepting the popular idea of the generally level and easy character of the country traversed, but few, I fancy, were aware of these great natural difficulties, which have been so interestingly adverted to by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and of the successful solution of which those who travelled from Calcutta yesterday and the day before saw so many admirable examples in the words of my esteemed friend and former master, Mr. George Turnbull. So again as to the supply of timber for sleepers much misconception has prevailed, the popular idea being that this country is covered with forest-jungle; the untravelled commercial mind probably regarding it as an unlimited timber deposit, on which drafts for sleepers to any amount would be honoured on presentation. To this is to be added that the machinery of our procedure is, almost of necessity, somewhat complex, and that where wheel has to work into wheel before motion is produced, some friction, and consequently retardation, must necessarily ensue. When these things come to be fairly considered, I am not without hope that the result of our labours during the last eleven years, though falling short of sanguine expectation, as human exertions generally do, may be deemed, on the whole, to be not altogether unsatisfactory. That our labours have not been light I can conscientiously state, but they have carried with them very much their own reward. While the best considered measures of the statesman might in many cases be but tentative, and in some even may bring suffering in their train, we have the high satisfaction of feeling that our labours are attended with unmixed benefit to the people of this land; while our works are in course of construction, they afford profitable employment to many thousands, besides at the same time teaching them the mechanical appliances, the more skilled construction, and the better organization of labours of the West; and when complete, these works provide those "easy means of communication" which, it has been truly said, form one of the three chief requisites to make a nation great and happy. When to labours so far self-rewarding is given that confidence and support, on the part of those whom we serve at home, which has been so constantly afforded by our Board of Directors, there would seem, to make our reward complete, to need but that public appreciation in approval which has been so warmly bestowed to-night. For the very handsome, and as far as myself is concerned, the I fear too flattering manner in which this toast was proposed by his Honor the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and for the very kindly manner in which it was received, I beg again, in the name of the engineering staff in the North-West Provinces, to return our very sincere and hearty thanks.—Hurkaru.

CURIOSITIES OF OUR CIVILISATION.

What a pity it is that human nature, or at least what we believe to be its highest form in the shape of the educated Englishman, is not perfect. We are all this year congratulating ourselves on the progress of England everywhere, but especially in the East. We have commenced the civilisation of China, utterly uninfluenced by the fact that our hands are already too full to permit of our governing indirectly nearly half the population of the world. In the whole history of our empire, from Ultima Thule to far Otago—both extremes being characteristically occupied by Scotchmen—no fact has been so cheering as the uniform success of our administration of India. The English journals confess this, and the Indian papers, which are more intimately acquainted with local details, while grumblingly acknowledging past success, murmur only because progress has not been still more rapid. But with all its triumphs of war and peace, Anglo-India has one or two thorns in its flesh, of which it is well to be occasionally reminded. Side by side with our civilisation, in the East as in the West, march certain gaunt spectres, presaging evil, which should temper our gratification and lessen our boasting. For every Christian that we make, and for every youth that we educate, we teach at least ten the curse of intoxication; and while capital and commerce unite to increase the wealth of India, insolvency and fraud are seen hovering aloft like ill-omened vultures. Abstemious from superstition and climate, and ignorant of bankruptcy from social law and family custom, the Hindoos are being fast made by Englishmen only too familiar with both.

Let us spend a day in the Calcutta Insolvent Court, over which Sir Mordaunt Wells presides so happily both for the grave moralist and the humorous satirist. The Court would be nothing without the learned judge, who is never more in his element than when he sits in our Indian Basinghall-street, unless when it falls to his lot to deliver a charge to the grand jury on the political topics of the hour. The fraudulent debtor and too trusting creditor find as little mercy at his hands as the trained forger and the too unfortunate votary of perjury. In both cases society benefits, and we heartily forgive Sir Mordaunt for his want of judicial dignity and his love of jokes such as the Scotch "Lords of Session" indulged in in the hard drinking days at the close of last century. Let us take last Saturday (February 7th) and look at the unfortunate victims as they defiled one by one before the dread tribunal. All classes, ranks and sexes, are represented, as well as many of our leading marts of trade, besides the capital. Mussulman vies with Hindoo who shall have the largest debts and smallest assets; the Government clerk emulates the once wealthy English merchant in the extravagance of his expenditure, and even the prince appears cheek by jowl with the beggar, while Sir Mordaunt presides over the whole, now denouncing fraud in accents which ought to make men for ever virtuous, and now unbending the judicial soul to the genial influence of jokes not too refined, and witty allusions not always impersonal. We begin with Richard Crow, a Government contractor, who has been thrice insolvent since 1844, and on this occasion appears indebted for £1,369. Mr. Crow was likely to settle with all his creditors, but this case illustrates the most remarkable folly of the class who will trust debtors in proportion to the number of times they have passed through the court. A Mussulman appears next, Mozufferally Khan. Alas for our traditional belief in the sanctity of Chandernagore. Mozufferally fled to that asylum, which has hitherto been supposed to be as safe as Holyrood or Westminster, and even the French authorities have no pity on him. There he lies in gaol, and, as the sad truth is acknowledged that he has little prospect of getting out, the case is a second time adjourned. We pass on to the next suit, in which Messrs. A. Wallace and A. W. Davidson appear simply unfortunate. Throughout the transactions which are disclosed by the evidence these gentlemen were declared by the Judge to have acted most honourably. But the facts throw some light on the Banian system of India. Unfortunate Banian, to have roused the ire of "one of the Judges of the High Court" by not attending, because it was mail-day! To this fact we owe the exposure.

Gocool Chunder Roy, Banian, supplies capital, and Messrs. Wallace and Davidson their experience and skill. There was no partnership; for two years the Banian seems to have received large profits, but subsequently the speculators were unfortunate, and the rich capitalist appears as the chief creditor of the men whose brains he used and who were so silly as to trust him.

After a few satisfactory schedules we come to a perfect nest of "kite-flyers," and the worthies who are engaged in that profitable, though dangerous employment, are no less than the servants of Justice herself, the subordinate officers of the late Sudder, and now Appellate High Court. Gourgopaul Bysack, cashier of the Sudder Court, owes £6,443, which he raised by means of joint promissory notes, to which "Europeans, East Indians, and other parties" put their names. Six months without protection is the too merciful decision in this man's case, with a threat that the Chief Justice will not remain ignorant of the "kite-flying" abilities of some of his clerks. Next appears a Government pensioner, Christopher Norton Mayer, indebted £254, his second insolvency. Hard-hearted Sir Mordaunt not to believe in the virtue of a man who declared he had submitted to petition "the nobility and gentry of Calcutta; and even the Viceroy," to help him till he was turned out of doors, rather than enter the Insolvent Court. But Mayer, too, was a kite-flyer, and the decision was "three months' without protection." Mayer was succeeded by Louis Albert de Croyer who, though honest and combining the artistic and learned professions of Parisian milliner and Professor of French, was worse than Mantalini, for against £1,102 of debts the assets were nil. The examination of Mrs. Woods, an Agra milliner, by the too trusting Patten who would act as his own lawyer, reads like a page of Dickens. Sir Mordaunt Wells was in his element; the lady, the creditor, the metaphysical discussions as to what constituted a moral and what a legal fraud, the tyranny of the Viceroy in so impeding all traffic on the road that Patten's baggage had not yet arrived, and the evident attempt of the lady to defeat her creditors—all combined to form a scene worthy of the highest efforts of Buckstone and Keeley.

But the last case was the best. Its hero was a prince, a grandson of Tippoo, and a recipient of Rs. 5,000 out of that grant of 52 lakhs to the Mysore princes which Lord Canning and all India denounced and his successor lately condoned. Prince Mahomed Fuckerodeen received protection from the Court some months ago, on a pledge that he would pay his debts by instalments from his pension. It is sad that while an English Viceroy and ladies dance at Prince Gholam Mahomed's balls for the delectation of Mussulmans, one member of the family should decamp to avoid his creditors and another should be lying in jail for years condemned for forgery. But such is life in the capital of India. But sadder still are the woes of Sir Mordaunt Wells, who trusted only too credulously, who, contrary to command, put his faith in princes and was betrayed. We let him tell his own tale in the words of one of the daily papers which records these chronicles of Calcutta.—[Report of the Prince's case in the Insolvent Court is given in another column.]

Even the insolvent's attorney had not received his costs. We wonder if these records are read in the back parlour in Victoria-street, Westminster. But enough for one day. While we must accept certain evils as the concomitants of our civilisation, such as kite-flying, and trading without capital, and trusting not wisely but too well, our hope is that Sir Mordaunt Wells will long flourish, to prove a terror to evil-doers while he amuses them who do well.

INSOLVENT COURT.

IN RE PRINCE MAHOMED FUCKEROODEEN.

The insolvent is one of the Mysore Princes. Some months ago the Court granted him protection, on his undertaking to pay out of his stipend from Government a certain sum monthly, for the benefit of his creditors.

Mr. Carrapiet, for one of the creditors, applied this day that the protection order be withdrawn, as the insolvent had failed to pay to the official assignee the instalments which he had been ordered by the Court to pay. The solicitor stated that with some difficulty he had been able to trace a house belonging to the insolvent, and upon information being given to the official assignee, the property was seized and sold.

His Lordship: I must say that Prince Mahomed Fuckerodeen has behaved in a very improper manner. He assured me when he was before me that if I granted him protection he would pay out of his income a certain sum for the benefit of his creditors; but he has not done so. As one of the family he has received his share of the Mysore grant, which was given to him for the express purpose of paying off his debts. Instead of paying his creditors he has spent the money in festivities and marriages. It is said that the Government made this grant because it was necessary that the Mysore princes should keep up their dignity, and they could not do so unless they were free from debt. Prince Fuckerodeen received Rs. 5,000 as his share; he did not pay one single shilling of that money towards the payment of his debts, but spent it in festivities and all kinds of ways. When he filed his schedule and came before me, I felt that it was a pity that a person in his position should go through the court, and I did all I could to persuade his relatives to settle with his creditors, and withdraw his petition. But this was not done. His debts amounted to Rs. 5,162, and the sum he received was Rs. 5,000, and he might have paid away that money towards his creditors, and been a free man. It was represented in England that the money was required to enable the family to pay off their debts. Mr. Carrapiet, who represented the creditors, consented, at my suggestion, to take twelve annas in the rupee, and the Prince then told me that if I granted him protection he would regularly pay his instalments. Mr. Carrapiet yielded to a certain extent, having had my assurance that the creditors would be paid according to the solemn promise made by the Prince. I granted the protection, and after getting it, it appears that he paid only a sum of Rs. 160 and then stopped. He has never been seen since; he has made himself scarce. The consequence is that he has taken me in completely. He made me a most solemn promise, and I granted the protection in the same way as I would have done to a European or East Indian who made me such a promise. I am sorry to see the Prince act in that way. I believe he is one of the grandsons of Tippoo, and I thought as he belonged to a wealthy family they would save him the disgrace of going through the court. Mr. Carrapiet applies to me to withdraw the protection, and I cannot refuse it. It would have been much better had the Government here been entrusted with the money to pay off the debts with their own hands, that is if the debts actually existed.

Mr. Hart, who had appeared for the insolvent, complained about his not having received his costs from the insolvent.

His Lordship said that he would have dismissed the insolvent's petition, but if he did, the insolvent would ask him to give up the Rs. 1,400 which had been realised by the sale of the house which had been seized by the official assignee.

Protection withdrawn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A NICE PRINCE.—Prince Mahomed Fuckerodeen, one of the Mysore Princes, and said to be a grandson of Tippoo Sultan, is certainly not a credit to his "friend," Sir Charles. He has put in his second appearance at the Insolvent Court, and Sir Mordaunt Wells is "sorry to see him act in such a manner." Sorrow the learned Commissioner might perhaps experience, but we much doubt that the feeling was accompanied by surprise, for the prince has only acted up to the creed of a true Mahomedan, "No faith to be kept with infidels." When the insolvent prince first honoured the Court with his presence he promised the Commissioner that he would pay a certain sum out of his monthly stipend to his creditors till his debts were cleared off; but this promise has never been performed, and what is more, his Highness has done Sir Charles Wood as well as his creditors. We remember, as doubtless all Indian tax-payers do, that certain sums were lately paid over to the Mysore family to enable them to pay off their debts and keep up their dignity. Prince Fukeeroodeen received Rs. 5,000 as his share of this grant; but while he carried out the latter part of the Secretary of State's intentions according to his own idea of native dignity, he utterly ignored the former. The Rs. 5,000 was spent merrily in dances and marriages, but the debts, amounting to little over that sum, remained owing, and are likely to continue so. As the commissioner plaintively observed, the Prince has "taken him in completely." Now, in his character of an insolvent whose protection order is withdrawn for conduct not the most honest in its nature, neither we nor the public are inclined to feel much interest in Prince Fukeeroodeen, and could well afford to dismiss the subject from our minds with the simple verdict of "serve him right;" but, as a recipient of public money given for a certain purpose, and appropriated to another, we are inclined to think that he has got off considerably better than he deserves. The withdrawal of the protection order may perhaps subject the Prince to a short sojourn in the civil jail, though, as he has "made himself scarce," even that is problematical; and so in point of fact this worthy descendant of the old freebooter of the Carnatic has managed to run heavily into debt, has got Rs. 5,000 out of the public purse, and last, but by no means least, has not even paid his solicitor; while the only sum to be obtained by the creditors consists of Rs. 1,400, realised by the sale of a house belonging to the insolvent. Whether or no the Prince committed a fraudulent act in withholding information about this house from the official assignee is a question apparently not raised in the case as before the Court on Saturday, but to outside readers it is certainly a very open one. But whether it be fraudulent or not, this offshoot of Russapuglah has to all intents and purposes cheated the public out of Rs. 5,000, acted dishonourably towards his creditors, and brought the former decision of the Court into something very like public ridicule. Verily, when looking at this case and that other little trifle of the altered bank note, Sir Charles Wood may well be proud of his royal pensioners and his efforts made in their behalf. They have certainly done their best to deserve his kind interference, and if they have done nothing else have laboured hard to impress upon him the words of wisdom—"Put not thy trust in princes."—Englishman.

WARRANT OFFICERS.—We (Delhi Gazette) published last week an Order by the Secretary of State for India, withdrawing from Warrant Officers of long and meritorious service commissions on the Veteran Establishment with pay, and offering them the empty bauble of mere "honorary" commissions without pay. Of all the acts of injustice and gross breaches of faith which are to be traced to the mode in which her Majesty's advisers have seen fit to extinguish the Indian army, this is the greatest. Admitting, as we do, that what is called amalgamation was a necessary result of the events of 1857-58, we still hold that, at no great expense, the claims of justice and equity could have been satisfied in a way they have not been. Here we have an act of wrong to a most deserving class, for which there is not even the highly satisfactory and very moral excuse of a large saving to the public purse. Hitherto a warrant officer, on attaining the rank of Deputy Assistant Commissary of Ordnance, in a period of from thirty to forty years' service, might be recommended for the commission of lieutenant. As such he would receive the sum of Rs. 376-10 a-month, which is Rs. 115 more than the pay of his office without the commission. If invalided, in India, he received Rs. 206-10 a-month, which is Rs. 110 more than without the commission. If on furlough, in England, he received £118 a-year which is £38 more than if without a commission. From 1846 to June 1857 a series of General Orders guarantee the privilege of extra pay to those who received commissions for service. And the Act of Parliament of the 2nd of August, 1858, for the better government of India, guarantees to the Indian forces "the like pay, pensions, allowances and privileges, and the like advantages as regards promotion and otherwise, as if they had continued in the service of the Company." Yet Sir Charles Wood quietly passes an order, applicable to the past and present, as well as the future, that such commissions shall not carry the extra pay solemnly promised in, at least five, General Orders extending over eleven years, and in a recent Act of Parliament. The position and privileges of a warrant officer, miserable as they are, are the only rewards held out to the most deserving soldiers in the army in time of peace. The number of warrant officers is few, and they form a small body of highly distinguished men, who have reached their position after service extending over from a quarter to half a century. These old veterans have looked forward to the commission with pay, as the only means which will enable them to reach their native land and die in peace, leaving to their children the blessing of a respectable education.

CABOOL, Jan. 19.—The report is afloat in Cabool that Sirdar Walee Mohamed Khan took the city of Mamana by the following stratagem:—When Sirdar Walee Mohamed Khan, with his troops, arrived in Sunglakh, which is situated near Mamana, the governor of the latter place, with a party of two hundred sowars, came to the Sirdar in order to inquire about the matter. Sirdar Walee Mohamed Khan received him with due honour, and conferred on him and his chiefs valuable khilats, or honorary dresses. The Sirdar also gave the governor a horse with a silver saddle. After some minutes Sirdar Walee Mohamed Khan spoke to him, and told him that his army was going to Herat via Mamana, and so he hoped that he would appoint one or two of his chiefs in his camp to collect supplies at every stage for the army, and he (Walee Mohamed Khan) would pay him the price of everything according to the rate of the country. The governor agreed to his request, and the Sirdar ordered his baggage, battalion, and cavalry to proceed at once, but, as the road went near the city gate, the Sirdar, having given some secret orders to his troops, rode with the governor of Mamana. No sooner had they approached the city gate than Sirdar Walee Mohamed Khan asked permission of the governor to see the city, saying that he had long heard beautiful descriptions of it, and since his army was going round the city, he (Walee Mohamed Khan) wished to accompany him, and after passing through would come out by another gate. The governor accepted the proposal, and they both went into the city. They had scarcely walked a few paces within the walls when the Sirdar gave a sign to his trumpeter, who immediately warned the whole army outside and the body-guard, according to the orders of the Sirdar, pulled the governor off his horse, and imprisoned him, and it was proclaimed in the city that Sirdar Walee Mohammed Khan was not desirous of hurting any one; hearing this all the inhabitants of the city came to pay their respects to Sirdar Walee Mohammed Khan. The writer says that the above news is only a rumour which is afloat in Cabool. The truth or falsity of it will be ascertained by the arrival of the next letter.—Jan.

20.—Sirdar Mohamed Allee Khan, having informed Shah Ghasee Khan that he had received the letter of Ameer Sahib and that of Sirdar Shere Allee Khan, requesting him (Mohamed Allee Khan) to enlist one thousand Kohistanee and Ghilzee men, and to send them as soon as possible to Herat, ordered him to send his men to the vicinity of Cabool to bring Kohistanees and Ghilzees. Sirdar Mohamed Allee Khan then went to Meranjee Sahib in order to read him the contents of the Ameer Sahib's letter, and returned at sunset to Balla Hissar, and Shah Ghasee sent his servants to bring the men for service.—Jan.

21.—A boy of ten years of age was fighting with another boy whose age was no more than eight or nine years; the former took off his shoe and struck the latter on the head, he fell down and soon after died; his parents waited on the Governor and complained against the murderer. The Governor consulted with the Kazeer, who said, "that is a boy of unmatured age, and consequently the law prohibits his execution." Upon this the Governor ordered him to remit Rs. 1,000 as a fine; the Kazeer replied that in case of murder no fine can be imposed on the murderer. After this the Governor ordered Hakeem Khan, the Kotwal of the city, to go and collect all the property of the murderer's father, and divide it into three parts, giving one to the parent of the murdered boy, and one to the father of the murderer, and one to the Government treasury as a fine. The Kazeer said that this decision was contrary to the law, but as he authorised it he might do as he pleased.—Delhi Gazette.

ADDRESS.—Presented by the native Pleaders of the High Court, Appellate Jurisdiction, to Sir Charles Jackson. "To the Hon. Sir Charles R. M. Jackson, Knight, Puisne Justice H. M. High Court of Judicature, at Fort William, in Bengal. Sir,—The esteem and satisfaction with which we regard your career in the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, however short its duration, make it incumbent upon us to address you on the occasion of your early departure for England. You have ever inspired us with a sense of your desire to render substantial justice, while your courteous conduct towards us has been so uniform and marked, that we cannot allow you to depart without making this open and public acknowledgment of the impression it has made on us. We deeply regret that we are so soon to be deprived of your services. We could have wished your stay amongst us to have been prolonged; yet we are fully aware that nearer and stronger ties draw you away to your home. In bidding you farewell we can only express our most cordial wishes for your welfare, and our most sincere prayers for your safe arrival. May a long, useful, and happy career in your native land be your reward for the years of arduous service passed in this country. Think kindly sometimes of us and of this country, as we shall often think of you, and may the Almighty God speed and prosper your happy voyage. (Signed) KISSENKISHORE, and other pleaders of the High Court, Appellate Jurisdiction." In reply, Sir Charles said:—"Gentlemen—I thank you for this kind and cordial address. I feel grateful to the Chief Justice for giving me the opportunity since my return from Penang of making myself acquainted with the pleaders who practice in this branch of the Court, and with the working of the new system in the appellate jurisdiction. It will be premature and scarcely becoming in me to express any opinion at present upon the working of the great experiment of the amalgamation of the Courts, but I cannot conceal from you the very high opinion I have formed of the pleaders who practice here. I had no idea till I sat here of the great ability and forensic skill which many of the members of this bar undoubtedly possess. I shall not hesitate to express the opinion elsewhere, and shall always take the greatest interest in your future prospects and status. I have no doubt that you will continue to add to your reputation. The late appointment of Baboo Sumbhoonath, Pundit to the bench should act as an incentive to further exertions on your part, and I trust that the ability with which he will discharge the duties of his office, and the increasing reputation of the bar, will secure for it in future the high prize which the Baboo has so deservedly won. You express a wish that I may enjoy a long and useful career at home. I hope it may be so; I do expect it. It is with a feeling of sadness that I acknowledge that my work in life is over. The summer is past and the harvest is ended, and nothing remains to me but the autumn and perhaps the winter of life spent in the quiet occupations of my English home. Again I thank you for your kind address."—Englishman, Feb. 20.

TIKHOOT, Feb. 12.—I am glad to be able to confirm what you stated in a recent number of the Englishman about this important district, for matters progress most favourably, and both planters and ryots seem satisfied.—the former with their official rulers, the latter with the relations now existing between themselves and the planters, and which might yet be made more liberal, with advantages to both parties. There is, fortunately, much moisture in the land, and this is the first desideratum for another fine indigo season, which will add to the popularity and high price of Tirhoot Factories. The prospects of a good opium crop are not favourable, but I am happy to say that the ryots now take to the poppy cultivation most zealously, for it unquestionably pays them better than any other crop: they can grow it profitably, in spite of a little plunder on the part of the opium Amlah, and which, till you alter native nature, can never be wholly removed. The first thought both of opium and indigo Amlah is, what they can make of their situations for themselves; but the constant ventilation of this corrupt state of things has done much good, and made both opium agents and planters more on their guard against abuse of authority on the part of their servants than they were. Not long since, in opium matters, the Hurkar's special correspondent went much too far in the way of condemnation; but possibly, if he had not done so, his statements would not have attracted the attention they did; and the result, after all, was a vast gain to the ryots, and a great improvement upon a system which opium managers seemed to think required no reform. Another illustration of reforms coming from without, and but rarely or ever from within, is the great value attaching even to a very exaggerated view of some public abuse on the part of the press. The Lieutenant-governor's visit here gave much satisfaction, and he seemed greatly pleased with everything he saw. He made himself most accessible, and he will be fortunate in his travels if he discovers many districts in the condition of Tirhoot, which he himself, I believe, allowed to be a model for all. Every respect was paid him; two carriages waited his arrival, about three miles from the station, with a full guard of honour from the Behar Mounted Rifles, which escorted him to the residence of their commandant, Mr. Forlong, with whom he and his party remained while they were here. On his leaving, a guard of honour again went with him for three miles, a compliment with which he must have been much pleased. He made an admirable speech to the Volunteers, spoken with real earnestness, and the sentiments he expressed were just and manly. The Behar Rifles are now about a hundred strong, all well mounted, with a handsome uniform, and really form a fine-looking, soldier-like body of men; they are now getting up a good band, which will assist to enliven this station. I trust the services of the rifles may never be required, and that the country may long be blessed, as it is at present, with peace and plenty; but should it prove otherwise, one hundred well mounted English gentlemen, accustomed to a little military discipline, would do much to keep all this part of the country quiet, and save the discredit, at any rate, of the officials ever having again to run away from their posts. One great good the corps has already effected is that of bringing men together and promoting good fellowship—a duty in which the officers try to prove themselves worthy the elections made by their comrades.—Englishman.

NANA SAHIB'S WELL.—The most interesting event of the Viceroy's progress thus far was the solemn service at the consecration of the Memorial Well of Cawnpore, followed a few days after by a similar service at the well in which were buried those who perished during the twenty days' siege of Wheeler's entrenchment. Objection has been taken by natives themselves to the name Nana Doondopunt inscribed on the former, as handing down to all posterity the name of a monster whom Asiatics themselves would otherwise forget. They say that the name "Nana Sahib" should have been used, as more general, and, while well-known to Europeans, likely to be forgotten by our native subjects in a few years. As it is, they assert that the "bud-mashes" look upon the monument, and will long point to it, as erected in honour of the glorious deed of Nana Doondopunt in 1857. The latest facts current in native society regarding the Nana are these. His wife visited Benares and lived there some months, at the time we mentioned that the females of his family were on their way from Nepal to that city. Afterwards she visited Bithoor. The natives assert that the Nana himself was in Benares last year for a short time, and all believe that he is still alive. Doubts are now entertained as to the death of Bala Rao, who with Tania Topee, Azeemoolah, Jowalla Persad, and the Nana, was a director of the massacre of the Cawnpore garrison in the boats. At the time he sent in the girl from his camp he was supposed by his party to be intriguing with the English, and was nominally under restraint. His death was almost immediately after reported, and a bundle of rags saturated with ghee was burned to represent his body. Such are the statements of the natives best qualified to know, and we must for generations expect conspiracies and intrigues in both Rajpootana and the Deccan such as have twice been discovered within the last twelve months.—Friend of India.

A STRANGE WAY OF GETTING RID OF LIFE.—The Allahabad Gazette records one of the many instances met with among nations over-civilised like the French and not civilised like the lower class Hindoo. A man, who had travelled from Pertabghur to see the mela at Allahabad, gave himself up to the magistrate after murdering an inoffensive child. He said he had neither friend nor acquaintance in Allahabad, and that he slept in a field on the night he arrived there. Gunfire awoke him, and he found himself so exceedingly cold, that he thought it would be good to murder some one and get hanged. Whilst entertaining this idea, two boys came in sight, so he murdered "the one nearest to him," and then gave himself up to justice. He was not at all sorry that he had committed the deed.

LANCASHIRE FUND.—The residents, European and native, of Nugee, Bijour, have held a public meeting in aid of the Lancashire Fund. They passed the resolution, among others, "that this meeting, as representing the district of Bijour, cannot be unmindful of the welcome sympathy and liberal aid which the suffering population of this and other famine-stricken districts of Northern India received from their English fellow-subjects in the year 1861; and desires now to record their deep sense, and grateful recollection of the same." Mr. Palmer, the magistrate, presided. Rs. 2,000 was collected on the spot.

MYSORE.

The Rajah of Mysore and his immediate supporters are so confident of the restoration of the province that they are already speculating who is to be Resident when Mr. Bowring ceases to act as Commissioner, and are anxious for the appointment of the Hon. Mr. Devereux, whose very able and careful administration when Judicial Commissioner, and intimate knowledge of the people and their customs, commended him to the respect of all the natives. If Mysore is to be given back, it is certain that Mr. Bowring cannot consent to act as Resident, after holding the whole executive power, and equally so that Mr. Devereux, who would have made a most successful Commissioner, is singularly well-fitted for the post of resident. But we hesitate to believe that Sir Charles Wood would, in spite of the distinct protests of Lord Canning and Lord Elgin, commit a political crime so great as that of handing over the souls and bodies of millions of people who have enjoyed the advantage of British rule, as well as the most fertile province in South India of the size of Scotland, to an aged chief, who for years was tried as a ruler, and plunged the country in misery, and who would be used as a tool of misgovernment, by the most bigoted and corrupt Brahmins in India. If there was reason for pronouncing the Rajah incompetent in 1847, the argument is far stronger now. Not the most perverse legal ingenuity can twist our engagement with the Rajah, whom we seated on the musnud and subsequently deprived only of the executive power which he was unfit to wield, into more than a promise that we should restore that power to his hands when we saw fit. Sir Charles Wood cannot, in the face of the declarations of three Governors-General, declare that a tottering old man dominated by superstitious Brahmins is, with one foot in the grave, able to govern Mysore even respectably. Still this is certain, that a month ago the Rajah boasted of having received information from home, and we fear that it is as easy for our native feudatories to obtain clandestine intelligence from the Secretary of State's office as from that of Bengal, which in this respect has a disgraceful notoriety. The erection of the Commissioner's office has accordingly been arrested.

We can only suppose that Sir Charles Wood has been tempted by the Rajah's promise to leave the country as a legacy to the Queen. This was talked of in Lord Canning's time, and, moreover, the Rajah promised to maintain General Cubbon's system of administration. But surely even Sir Charles Wood would not be guilty of so doubtful an act as mortgaging the people and country of Mysore to the Rajah for the term of his natural life, in order that we may get both by a title not a bit better than the most satisfactory one which we now possess. And General Cubbon's native system has been superseded by our own, with its codes and procedure. Such a result would be a serious commentary on the order given by the Court of Directors, that nothing should be done by us in Mysore which could not be conveniently carried on by the Rajah if the government were ever placed in his hands. Yet the moment the Punjab system is introduced such a transfer is confidently talked of! If it would please the Rajah, during the few years he has yet to live, to allow him to issue the final order in all capital cases, by all means do so. But the time has come to declare to him and before the world, as Lord Dalhousie would have done long ago, that so long as the sun endures and the English hold India they will rule Mysore according to their engagement, for at no time since we arrested the anarchy caused by the Rajah has he shown himself fit to govern, and still less now, when a great old age shows its effects in both body and mind. Moreover, the improved Punjab system has just been introduced, and Mr. Bowring is most industriously devoting himself to the purification of that quasi-Asiatic administration on which General Cubbon prided himself. We hesitate not to say that the restoration of Mysore to the Rajah on any plea, and especially on the promise that he will leave as a legacy to the Queen what is already her Majesty's, will be the greatest political crime in our history, compared with which our invasion of Afghanistan and sale of Cashmere are venial.—Friend of India.

THE BACHELORS' BALL.—The bachelors of Madras certainly deserve the best thanks of their guests for having got up for them one of the pleasantest balls of the season. The assemblage commenced arriving somewhere after 9 p.m., and was rather less numerous than one usually sees at the Banqueting-hall; both circumstances being probably attributable to the consequences of the severe round of dissipation which Madras society has been undergoing during the last week. But what was wanting in numbers was supplied by a superabundance of spirit on the part of the dancers, who kept up their exertions till an early hour on Saturday morning. The music of the 60th band was, as usual, deservedly admired, and the vocal accompaniment which they introduced into some of the pieces had a remarkably pretty effect. The supper arrangements were excellent, and the tables being spread in the verandah, where there was a pleasant sea breeze, was certainly a great improvement upon the old plan of having supper in the gallery. His Excellency the Governor was present; but retired at an early hour. We accept the commission from Madras society to offer their best thanks to the Madras Bachelors for the excellent entertainment they provided, and hope that it may not be the last time that we shall have the pleasure of recording the occurrence of such an agreeable meeting.

HYDERABAD, Jan. 30.—I wish to be more precise in regard to the information I gave you by my letter of yesterday. Scindhia holds some villages in the district of Umber which belong to the Nizam. At this place an action took place between the Arabs hired at Aurungabad by the new employé of Scindhia, and the Rathores of his former employé holding possession of those villages. The Rathores were defeated; and their jemadar going afterwards into Aurungabad, accompanied by one of his followers, the Arabs, his late opponents, attempted to seize him, and his follower was killed in the affray. The affair, then, as far as it concerns the Nizam's Government, resolves itself into a murder, committed within its jurisdiction, which it is bound to punish, for which purpose the minister is taking his measures. It is but too unhappy a fact that the interposition of his authority should be necessary from the powerlessness of his deputy at Aurungabad to do his duty. The Arabs engaged in the affair were men out of service, and I presume, at liberty to serve Scindhia temporarily or permanently, and if this murder had not been committed, the matter would have rested without agitation. The Arab Chaoos (Islam), to whom the murder is imputed, is not disposed to give himself up, and is supported by his followers; he has taken post in a strong house. The Arab chiefs here disapprove of the conduct of the Chaoos, and they will prevail upon him or coerce him to quit the country.—Englishman.

CASUALTIES TO THE SHIPPING.—Two other steamers have got into trouble. The Nemesis, which left Madras with our last fortnightly mails, contrived to knock a hole in her bottom, near Galle, and has since proceeded to Bombay for repairs. Six steamers, the Colombo, the Jaxon, the Cadiz, the Burmah, the Euryranthe, and the Nemesis, have met with accidents, in these Eastern waters, within the last four months. Three of them have been completely lost. And even while we are writing, intelligence has come to hand of the total loss of a seventh vessel, the Bussorah, belonging to the India Steam Navigation Company, for which Messrs. Dymes and Co. are the agents here. This steamer was wrecked off Bombay, and grave fears are entertained that all on board have perished with her.—Madras Athenæum.

THE SHOW OF THE MADRAS HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY took place at the gardens on February 28, and was very well attended. The climate of Madras is certainly not propitious to the growth of most of our English flowers, and this fact being borne in mind, we think that the society made a very creditable display. The sweet peas and dahlias were deservedly admired. Of the latter, there were some really fine specimens. We were somewhat disappointed in the show of roses, the greater part of them appearing to be faded or overblown. One of the rose hedges at the Shevaroy's would, we fear, have surpassed the whole collection. There were but few orchids; only three specimens, we believe, having been exhibited, and those not of the finest description. It would seem a pity that more attention should not be paid to the cultivation of these magnificent flowers, which, in some of the Indian jungles, deck almost every tree, and pervade the whole forest with their fragrance; there were some fine specimens of ferns, but chiefly of the commoner sorts. We were gratified to notice several pots of violets, with the pretty little blue flowers peeping out here and there from the green leaves, looking as if they scarcely felt at home, under the hot Indian sun. We believe that Lady Denison and Colonel Colbeck were among the successful competitors for prizes both for vegetables and flowers. The tasteful and artistic decoration of the principal tent was worthy of much praise, and it was a great relief to escape under its roof of dense green foliage from the heat outside. It is really so seldom that one sees good flowers in this country that the exhibition of the society must always be a very pleasant treat, and one which no one will have regretted going to see. The number of visitors was, as usual, very large, a fair proportion of them being ladies.—Madras Athenæum.

ACCIDENT TO LIEUTENANT BAIRNSFATHER.—Information has reached Madras of a painful occurrence which took place a few days since on the Neilgherries, and which nearly caused the death of a young officer, Lieutenant H. W. Bairnsfather, who was seized by a tiger when forming one of a Shikar party from Ootacamund. It appears that the party had been out previously on the morning of the same day, when they succeeded in killing one tiger. Subsequently they went after another, which, catching sight of Mr. Bairnsfather, sprang upon him and laid hold of his leg, proceeding to drag him into the jungle. His sporting companions, however, all fired at the brute, which dropped its prey and was slain, no less than twenty-two balls being found lodged in its body. It was a most providential circumstance that none of them wounded Mr. Bairnsfather. That unfortunate gentleman was carried into Ootacamund, slung in a cumby, and although much torn as to his leg, was, we believe, expected to recover. Tigers would seem to have greatly increased in number on the Blue Mountains and to have grown bolder than formerly in their depredations. We are told of as many as five together being seen recently near the Avelanche Bungalow by a Shikar party, who did not deem it prudent to meddle with them. Also of another, which actually seized and carried off a bull, within sight of the windows of a dwelling-house. What are sportsmen whose delight is in the pursuit of big game about?—Madras Athenæum.

THE A BATTERY, 14th Brigade Royal Artillery, which arrived from Bengal on Thursday last, and encamped on the North Glacis, proceed by train, February 28, to Bangalore.

CHOLERA has broken out among the detachment of the 60th Regiment, just arrived from Wellington, several men have died of the disease.

OOTACAMUND.—We are concerned to hear of the death of Major J. W. Stretzell, of the Invalid Establishment, which took place at Ootacamund last week. The melancholy event was occasioned by lock-jaw, the result, we learn, of an injury arising from the insertion of a sharp instrument into the cavity of the ear.—Athenæum, Feb. 28.

MISS KATE PEARSON.—A curious case has been for some days before the Police Court of Bombay, in which Miss Kate Pearson, 17 years of age, sues her alleged father for separate maintenance. The father is master blacksmith in H.M.'s Dockyard. One of the witnesses, a Mahomedan, was sworn on the Bible, and when the magistrate remonstrated with the interpreter, the Mussulman said, "It is the same thing; I believe in Christ as in any other prophet." Miss Pearson wished to prove that her father had been guilty of indecently assaulting her. When examined, the alleged father denied the charge on oath, and said he had never struck her with greater violence than a parent might use. He affirmed, "She is not my daughter. I don't know whose daughter she is. My wife, who is dead, told me she was her daughter. I have always believed her to be such, and held her out to the world as my daughter." The case was adjourned.

HINDOOS VISITING ENGLAND.—We learn from the Bombay Times that the Marathi press habitually insist on the benefits of Hindoos visiting England. Rao Bahadur Ramchandra Balkrishna has himself resolved to set up a house of business in London. The native journals say "he will not, of course, on his return suffer himself to undergo the very humiliating as well as disagreeable process of eating the five products of the cow, the unfailing punch guryas. He is too courageous a man to do it. His friends rely upon his firmness in this respect—a firmness which, it must be confessed, has failed Mr. Mahiputram by his over-anxiety to be readily admitted into his caste."

SIR W. MANSFIELD, in the course of his tour of inspection, arrived at Nusseerabad, on the 27th ultimo, after passing through Ajmere and visiting the height of Taraghur, once an old Mahratta fort, and now described by a correspondent of the Bombay Times as a Sanitarium. "H. M.'s 28th have a club-house here, situated in a lovely garden, where roses bloom by summer and oranges ripen in winter, and where lordly trees give shelter all day from the fiercest sun." At Nusseerabad, after an inspection of the brigade under Brigadier Younghusband, C. B., Sir W. Mansfield held a levee. Next day the Commander-in-Chief congratulated the 25th on its good character and high state of discipline. His Excellency left for Neemuch.

THE INDIAN TRAMWAY COMPANY, not satisfied that the assistance promised by Government is sufficient to induce capitalists to come forward on a large scale in England, have resolved to confine their works to the short feeder from Palej to Jumboosar, on the Bombay and Baroda Railway. The contract amounts to £70,000, the cost for a single mile being £3,500. Government provide the land, embankments, culverts, and earthworks, which are equivalent to one fourth of the cost. Some 6,000 shares have been taken up in India.

LIEUT. BROCKMAN.—Our Paper has the following record of an officer who lately died at Poona;—"We have learned with no little pain of the untimely demise, on the 14th Feb., of Lieut. Brockman, of the 4th K. O., which melancholy event occurred at Poona after a very brief illness. Lieut. Brockman first came to Sind with the 64th Regiment, from which corps he sold out under very peculiar circumstances. His pay sergeant defrauded the company, of which he had charge, of a very considerable amount of money. Lieut. Brockman was, of course, called on to make good the sum; having no resources he determined upon selling his commission. The officers and men of his regiment in vain attempted to dissuade him from this step; he was beloved by all, and the regiment to a man, from the colonel downwards, volunteered to raise the money by subscriptions. But the high-spirited young officer steadily adhered to his resolution, arguing, that as he had committed an error, it was nothing but right he should suffer the consequences. He went home, and, during the Crimean war, enlisted as a private soldier; served most gallantly during the campaign; got into the Land Transport Corps, and was rewarded, ultimately, with a commission in the 4th K. O., in which he obtained his lieutenant's step. The deceased was as much beloved in the 4th as he was in the 64th, simply because he was a true soldier, as gallant as he was good."

PROPOSED USE OF HUMAN GAS.—We remember reading that a gallant officer of the Stud Department made the discovery that Bursatie in horses was no more than an accumulation of kunkur. A lively genius at once suggested that the Grand Trunk Road should, on the score of economy, be metalled with the animals past cure. Another, on learning that man was pronounced by an eminent professor to be nothing, after all, but a little gas and a certain number of buckets of water, proposed the watering of our "thundie surruk" accordingly. We now learn that an eccentric philosopher at Bombay proposes the lighting of his city by gas manufactured from dead Hindoos. Here is his proposal, as addressed to the Times of India:—"My plan would be to erect a blast furnace in the neighbourhood of the proposed gas works. In the furnace would be erected, say twelve retorts, in the interior of each of which should be a gridiron to slide on bearers fixed in the interior of the retort. On the completion of the funeral ceremonies in an adjoining apartment built for the purpose, the corpse would be brought to the mouth of a retort (the door of which would be thrown open), the grating drawn out, the dead body placed thereon, the door closed again, and in ten minutes all that would remain would be a handful of ashes, which could either be placed in a sepulchral urn, or swept into the ash pit, at the option of the friends of the deceased. Is our operation faulty? 'Yes,' say our chemical critics, 'for you still liberate the gases of the bodies to poison our atmosphere, as at present. Is this your boasted plan?' Stay, friend; not so fast in drawing conclusions. I have not shown you an educt pipe fitted to each retort which conducts the carbon-loaded gas into the purifier, from whence to be conducted into a gasometer! It is said that many of the poorer classes of Hindoos are unable, from their poverty, to purchase wood fuel, now become so expensive, for cremative purposes. Keeping this in view, I wish to make my plan a self-paying one, and this could only be effected by selling the gas thus collected for illuminative purposes. Estimated profits of this plan. The number of native dead subject to a cinerary process in the Island of Bombay is about twenty-five per day. Each body, it is estimated, would yield two hundred cubic feet of gas—many would yield much more. Now Rs. 6 per 1,000 cubic feet would be a moderate charge; therefore, in a monetary point of view merely, the scheme would pay. Fastidious people may be shocked and startled at the scheme; but on what reasonable grounds? Is a man of mark, whose whole life has been devoted to the enlightenment of his fellow countrymen, to be quenched from our sight for ever by the fell stroke of death, and leave not a scintillating ray behind? Forbid it, economy and common sense. Does it cost nothing, think you, to clothe the ribs with rich store of carbon that it should be afterwards wasted in the desert air—the very marrow of our complaint? Would it not create a sweetly mournful feeling in our breasts to see that, although our friend be dead, yet meteor-like, as in life, he was shedding an effulgent ray to dispel the darkness, before seeking the glowing galaxy of light in the other world? The first Napoleon bade his chemists make nitre from the bones of the Parisian dead. Is it so strange, then, that I should propose to make gas of the Hindoo dead? Patriotic Englishmen have willed their dead bodies to the dissecting table. May not we expect a corresponding patriotism for the gasometer? Should the English in India ever abandon the objectionable custom of depositing their dead in the earth, I, Curtius like, am ready to leap the gulf of prejudice into the gasometer! That is, if I am alive at the time of change. No, that's a bull—I mean if I am dead. Is it not more honourable to shine as a gaslight than to stop the mouth of a bungalow as vulgar clay?—TOM CRINGLE.—Bombay, Feb. 9.

CONVERTS.—On the 12th Feb. the Rev. James Mitchell, of the Free Church Mission, Poona, baptized five natives. One of them, we hear, is rather a smart and intelligent young man, a recent convert, having received the truth in the love of it within the last two months. He is just now engaged as a sweeper, but as he is a good reader it is hoped he is destined for something better. Another man, not very old, has been an inquirer for a considerable time, has suffered much from his relatives in consequence, being forsaken of his wife and turned out of doors by his elder brother, who has taken possession of all the family bullocks, ploughs, &c. The man is a Koonbi. He is simple, but is thought to be sincere and faithful. He works in the fields as a day labourer just now. It is hoped that justice may yet be done him in the restoration of some of his family property. The third is a blind man, of the Poor-house, young, of Mussulman extraction, clever, has been for years acquainted with the truth, and has lately shown much anxiety. The other two are women, rather aged and dependent, but interesting. One of them lately took refuge at the Mission-house, and on leaving home, threw with scorn her household gods into a well by the way. She is by caste a Koonbi.—Bombay Guardian.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of letters or newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 13th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

REPORT ON THE VOYAGE OF THE SHIP
"ALNWICK CASTLE" WITH INDIAN EMIGRANTS TO TRINIDAD.

From Captain C. Eales, Protector of Emigrants at the Port of Calcutta, to S. C. Bayley, Esq., Officiating Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal. (No. 1, dated the 2nd January, 1863.)

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, dated 1st May, 1862, forwarding a report from Dr. Pearse, with other enclosures, relating to the voyage of the ship Alnwick Castle with Indian emigrants from this port to Trinidad.

The Medical Inspector of Emigrants and myself having given the suggestions of Dr. Pearse the most careful consideration, are of opinion that it is scarcely necessary to report upon the different questions in detail, as the views therein expressed do not appear to be so much opposed to the generally accepted sentiments on the subject as the Emigration Commissioners seem to think, the majority of the proposed alterations having been already adopted under the recent recommendations of the Emigration Committee.

The amount of ventilation now invariably provided in Emigrant ships has been proved by experience to be amply sufficient for all purposes, and is capable of being easily and efficiently controlled. The degree of regulation must necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each individual voyage, and must perforce be left to the judgment of the medical officer in charge; while the necessity of having the lower deck kept thoroughly clear for a certain period daily must be acknowledged. There can be no question that Dr. Pearse's opinion, that to keep a person by force exposed on the upper deck who is manifestly suffering from the low temperature, must be injurious.

Throughout Dr. Pearse's report there seems to be the clearest evidence that the successful issue of the voyage of the Alnwick Castle is primarily owing to the great care and judgment displayed in selecting the coolies in Calcutta, to a judicious use on the voyage of the means and appliances he had actually at his command, as well as to the unceasing personal supervision exercised by him over the minutest details connected with his charge, and finally, in regulating the ventilation and temperature of the lower deck, generally, so as to protect the emigrants from the injurious effects of chilly draughts and dampness. The adoption of these wise and salutary measures have been followed by the most favourable results, affording in themselves the strongest evidence in support of employing men of Dr. Pearse's experience in preference to all others possessing less energy of character and discernment.

Adverting to Dr. Pearse's personal allusions to myself in connection with the fittings and provision of the Alnwick Castle, I beg to annex herewith an explanation from him on the subject, and have only to state in conclusion, with respect to the supply of dried milk, that he was applied to solely on the ground of there having been at the time but a very limited supply of this article available in the market for the use of other emigrant ships then under charter.

The means of protecting the hatchways by booby hatches, as described by Dr. Pearse, is now invariably adopted in every emigrant ship sailing from this port, to the entire exclusion of the old tarpaulin method.

From W. H. Pearse, Esq., M.D., Government Emigration Service, to Captain C. Eales, Protector of Emigrants at the port of Calcutta (dated the 30th December, 1862).

Sir,—I have the honour to ask your attention to a remark in my report of the ship Alnwick Castle, dated Trinidad, January 15th, 1862.

After stating some omissions in the supplies proper to have been put on board, and alluding to my having failed to obtain them in Calcutta, the report goes on to say, "The influence of the authorities at Banks' Hall should rather be to enforce the full supply."

I beg you to accept my expressions of regret at that remark, because, however true it might be that omissions occurred, I was not at liberty to suppose and state that that influence of any one was other than doing his utmost to secure for the coolies the full supplies of the charter party. I was not then aware of the difficulties which prevented the fulfilment of the charter party, and that the states of the market might be such as to make it impossible for you to obtain in Calcutta that which was due. Permit me to add, as some explanation of that remark, that it was written at the time I had very much needed the articles in question. I have since been informed that the steam pipes to which I referred were not at the time under your supervision; and remember that the fittings of the hatch-houses, steam pipes, &c., were arranged by a gentleman from Banks' Hall. I regret that these details, over which your office in its transition stage had not the supervision, should have been held responsible for arrangements over which it had no control.

INDIA-OFFICE, March 20.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie, K.T., G.C.B., the Right Hon. the Earl of Ellenborough, G.C.B., Lieut-general Lord Hotham, the Right Hon. J. W. Hanley, M.P., Lieut-general Sir C. Yorke, G.C.B., Major-general A. Clarke, Major-general Sir P. M. Melvill, K.C.B., to be her Majesty's Commissioners to inquire into and examine whether any departure from the assurance, held out by the 21st and 22nd Vic., cap. 106, sec. 56, and the 23rd and 24th Vic., cap. 100, to her Majesty's Indian Military Forces, has taken place by reason of the measures which have been adopted since the passing of the first mentioned Act of Parliament, by the Secretary of State in Council, or by the Government or military authorities in India, towards the re-organisation of the Indian army, and the amalgamation of her Majesty's Indian forces with her Majesty's general forces.

SIR ROBERT MONTGOMERY leaves Lahore on Feb. 19, en route to Delhi, to meet the Viceroy and Governor-general at that station. We hear he makes a short detour before proceeding to Delhi direct. He will, we understand, be accompanied by Col. MacLagao, Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department.

THE INDIAN COUNCIL.

WE have not given in extenso the debate, or rather conversation, in the House of Lords on Tuesday last, on Lord Lyveden's question as to the numbers and allowances of the Councillors of India, because it was full of long passages that led to nothing. It was a waste of words, a mere beating of the air, and the Duke of Argyll was not far out in his supposition that his noble friend Lord Lyveden addressed his question to her Majesty's Government rather for the purpose of expressing to the House his own opinion than of obtaining an answer the substance of which he could not but anticipate. Public business would move on but slowly indeed if such useless discussions were much encouraged. It had been proposed by some that the Council should consist of six, by others of twelve, and by a very large majority it was decided in Parliament that the number should be fifteen. That question, therefore, was fairly settled, unless after some years' experience it should be discovered to be imperatively necessary to revise the constitution of the Council; but in declaring that Parliament was now quite in the dark as to how the Council was working, Lord Lyveden indirectly commended it, for in such a case no news is good news, and if there had been any very serious collisions or obstructions Parliament and the Public would not have been long in the dark upon the subject, and there would then have been even less need than now of Lord Lyveden's question. It is true that there were rumours some time ago that Sir Charles Wood and his Council did not work very harmoniously together, but these have quite died away, and even Lord Lyveden does not deem it worth his while to make the slightest allusion to them. There must always be some collisions of opinion—some occasions on which Presidents of Council and a certain number of the members must arrive at opposite conclusions—and both parties, like man and wife, must have their turn to give way, and bear and forbear as best they can, and not talk of a divorce every time they differ.

Lord Lyveden makes an ill-timed and useless suggestion that the councillors should be reduced to six or eight, but others think the more the merrier, and agree with King Solomon, that in the multitude of councillors there is wisdom. If there is not always a proportionate amount of wisdom in a multitude of councillors there is, at all events, under ordinary circumstances, a proportionate amount of practical knowledge and experience, and therefore it is well that as there are so few men who are what are called in India subjantas, or knowers of everything—walking encyclopædias—that there should be such a supply of working members in Council as might be called upon in their turn for their advice and assistance in the leading different departments of political knowledge. Lord Lyveden, to justify his taking up so much of the time of the House on this occasion, should have shown, what he made no attempt to do, that something had occurred in the practical working of the system to render it necessary to give a jauwab, or dismissal, to more than half of the present councillors, though it is admitted that they are all more or less distinguished for ability and experience. Even Lord Lyveden confesses that they are men of business habits and high character. It might be said, too, he observed, that Sir John Lawrence was one of them; but then, says his lordship, we do not want fifteen Sir John Lawrences. Highly as we estimate the members of the Council we cannot pretend to think that they are all Lawrences, or that there is any serious danger of our having too many of such men in the Indian Council. If there were any chance of such an event Lord Lyveden would have little reason to hope that he could persuade the British Parliament to get rid of them, even at the proposed cheese-paring to the country of ten thousand pounds a year.

THE LATE SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

ALL that was mortal of one of the noblest of British Indian heroes now lies in the grandest of England's public sanctuaries. He little thought, in the modesty of his nature, when he first left his native land, that he should lead so splendid a career in the East, and be honoured at the close of it by so distinguished a place in a great national edifice—a temple, not of religion only, but of human glory. There he now lies, not alone in his greatness, but surrounded by the silent company of the Kings, and warriors, and statesmen, and patriots, and poets, and philosophers, who have secured to England her pre-eminence amongst the nations.

"Proud names, who once the reins of empire held
In arms who triumphed or in arts excelled,
Chiefs graced with scars and prodigal of blood,
Stern patriots, who for sacred freedom stood,
Just men by whom impartial laws were given,
And saints who taught and led the way to heaven."

And we may well apply to the brave and honest and single-hearted and gentle-natured Outram what Tickell, the writer of these lines, said of his friend Addison:—

"Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation came a nobler guest,
Nor e'er was to the bowers of bliss conveyed
A fairer spirit or more welcome shade."

Sir James Outram was truly and emphatically what Sir Richard Steele would have called "a Christian hero," and the Dean of Westminster could have had not a moment's hesitation on religious grounds in according him an honoured resting place in the Abbey. For Outram was not only the bravest of the brave on the field of battle when risking his life for his Queen and country, but the meekest and kindest of human beings in the hour of peace, or by the domestic hearth. With the courage of the lion he had the gentleness of the lamb. Though so considerate and kind to others, he was severe upon himself, and was ever ready to sacrifice life and fortune to his high sense of honour. His word was indeed his bond—as good security for the fulfilment of a promise as human ingenuity could invent. When he was really in need of pecuniary assistance he returned his prize money of £10,000 to Government after the conquest of Scinde, because he disapproved of the policy pursued there; and though he dearly loved military glory earned in a just cause, he voluntarily followed Havelock at the relief of Lucknow, when he was entitled to lead the troops himself to that most noble and memorable task.

The body of this distinguished British worthy had been brought from Pau, in the Pyrenees, where he died, and deposited for a while in Queen's-gate-gardens, at Kensington. On Wednesday, at eleven o'clock, it was conveyed in procession to the Abbey, which it did not reach till after one. It was followed on the road by upwards of forty private carriages, filled with many of the most distinguished of living men who had earned their honours on the same distant soil. Amongst them were Lord Clyde, Lord Keane, Sir John Lawrence, and Sir George Pollock. Amongst the noblemen present in the Abbey, which was densely crowded, were the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Dalhousie, and the Earl of Shaftesbury. Many present regretted to see comparatively so few members of the British Government present on such an occasion, and it was generally felt that one who had done so much for the honour of the country ought to have had a grand and impressive public funeral and a noble monument at the expense of the State. Perhaps, however, the voluntary attendance at his grave of many thousands of his admiring and lamenting countrymen—amongst them many of his brethren in arms, and many civilians distinguished for their eminent services in the East, and capable to appreciate his worth—would have been all that the great and good man whom we have lost would have coveted of the last of earthly honours.

Since the above was in type we have met with a paragraph in the Times, from which we learn, to our surprise, that the funeral of Sir James Outram was, after all, at the cost of the Government. If so, we must say that it was not properly attended on the part of the great officials, and that it was deplorably deficient in that magnificence and solemnity which should attend upon a State ceremonial on such an occasion. We are sorry to say that we observed a want of due respect for the departed hero and the solemn public duty of the day, even in the officials of the Abbey, for the clerical gentry and the young choristers did not, it seems, deem it worth their while to don newly-washed linen vestures; for what they had on were decidedly the worse for wear. They were crumpled and dingy. We have heard, indeed, that it is a law of the Abbey that those clerical garments should only be washed at certain seasons, fixed by the authorities, and that no amount of soiling will justify a demand for a clean garment before the appointed time. If this really be the case, it is a custom more honoured in the breach than the observance, for no absurd reverence for antique regulations ought to be allowed to interfere with modern notions of decency and duty.

COOLIE EMIGRATION TO REUNION.

OUR Government has got into a difficulty with respect to the question of Coolie emigration into the island of Réunion, which may possibly lead to a very disagreeable misunderstanding with France. The French Emperor, in his anxiety to benefit a French colony, sanctioned a system of what was absurdly called free emigration from Africa. It was in reality a system of slavery, and in our intolerance of slavery in every form we protested against it. The French consented to give up the African system on condition that they might take free native labourers from British India. As the least of two evils this was agreed to, and now we find that matters are even worse than they were, for our own subjects are now slaves, and our second interference will be more imperative, more delicate, and offensive than the first. The subject has just been discussed in the House of Commons. Though a British consul had been stationed in Réunion to protect the interests of the poor ignorant emigrants from Bengal, as they were distributed all over the island and placed under very many masters, it was impossible for a single individual to save them from many hardships and much oppression. It appears that when they are found idle in the streets, or are without a pass from their masters, they are carried off by the authorities, and made to work as convicts. It was reported by one observer that they were to be seen standing up to their shoulders in the sea, passing along stones for the harbour now in course of construction at Réunion. Some of these poor wretches, if found incapable of work as agricultural labourers, are compelled to accept lower wages than had been promised them on leaving India. Not fewer than 47,000 Indian Coolies, according to a statement from Mr. Layard, had been taken to the small island of Réunion. Mr. H. Seymour stated that he had always looked upon emigration from India as the real way of putting an end to slavery and the slave trade, but in this he was certainly as much mistaken as in his supposition that India is an over-peopled country. Mr. Cave, who introduced the question of Coolie emigration, consented to drop it for the present, on the understanding that certain papers upon the subject should be laid before the House.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

WE gather from an abstract of the Fourteenth Report of the Directors of the Scinde Railway, to be submitted to the eighth annual meeting of the company, to be held on Monday next, that the general traffic on the line has steadily kept pace with the increase of rolling stock. The financial statement shows that from the commencement the sum of £1,480,234 has been received, and that £1,574,803 has been expended. Above 100 waggons, laden with cotton wool, oil seeds, indigo, &c., are now brought into the Kurrachee station every day. Samples of cotton grown in Scinde, about fourteen miles from Kurrachee, have been pronounced by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce equal to the best cotton of Egypt and America.

With respect to the Punjab line, the number of passengers between Lahore and Umrithur, since the opening of the line on the 10th of April to the 31st of December last, amounted to 286,805, and yielded a gross return of £1,000 per mensem. From the commencement the sum of £1,339,079 has been received, and the sum of £1,245,088 has been expended.

On the Delhi line the sum of £912,588 has been received, and only the sum of £1,823 has yet been expended. An available balance of £910,555 stands to the credit of the undertaking with the Secretary of State for India.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 23.

THE INNISKILLIN DRAGOONS.

Captain ARCHDALL asked the Secretary of State for War whether the attention of the War Department or of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-chief had been called to a recent court-martial held on the paymaster of the Inniskillen Dragoons, and to the remarks of the Commander-in-chief in India on the proceedings of the said court-martial, and on the state of the regiment; also to certain allegations which had been made in the public press and elsewhere as to the confinement in close arrest and death of Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley, of the above regiment, whether any inquiry had taken place, and what had been the result of such inquiry.

Sir G. LEWIS said the attention of the Commander-in-chief and the War Department had been called to the case in question, and a report from India had been called for and received. It was, however, still under consideration, and no decision had yet been come to upon it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MARCH 27.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Mr. J. B. SMITH: Further correspondence with the India Government relative to the navigation of the River Godavery.

Mr. H. B. SHERIDAN: Correspondence upon the subject of the treasure stolen by the Bheels of Kandeish from Bombay native merchants, and afterwards recaptured from them and since declared as prize, subsequent to the date of the last return on the same matter.

Captain JERVIS: Address for returns of copy of any minutes or correspondence relative to military despatch to Bengal, No. 15, March 6, 1832; and copy of separate letter from Bengal, dated 25th April, 1829, &c.

FUNERAL OF SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

A resting place in the sanctuary which is the most ancient, venerable, and most honoured in the land—a gathering of men illustrious by rank, station, and service around his grave—the spontaneous assemblage of a great and sympathetic crowd in the Cathedral and its precincts—proved on Wednesday how much of respect and admiration James Outram had won in distant climes from his countrymen. His career, after all, was one which it needed some special knowledge of the country in which he laboured, and of the works he accomplished, to enable one to appreciate in all its usefulness and success. The age of great conquests and vast annexations is gone, and with it has expired the opportunities which made our first statesmen and soldiers in the East so famous at home, and hoisted them over the level of popular indifference to Indian politics. But the rebellion of 1857 fired the coldest heart, the men who came to the front of the small and scattered bands of surprised, but not downcast, Christians in the East, and led them to victory or fell at their head, at once became the heroes of popular story. Sir James Outram, although he had performed the services of which a very imperfect outline was given a few days back in our columns, although he had led an army in the field, and had extorted by prompt blows from Persia an honourable peace, would have been comparatively little known in England except for his connection with the first relief and final reduction of Lucknow. So unjust is Fortune. For, if he had never become known by these great services, he would still have been well entitled to the regard and esteem of his country. Had the revolt never occurred he was still the man whose courage, truth, generosity, and kindly nature justified the felicity of phrase in which, years before, Sir Charles Napier so well expressed the thoughts of many men when he called Outram "the Bayard of India." And so he was, indeed—a knight without fear and without reproach, and with that higher chivalry which Bayard never knew—a deep feeling for classes, not only below the military and social orders to which he belonged, but those alien from his race and natural enemies to his faith. And chivalry higher still he had; for most covetous of honour as he was, and sickening with the last infirmity of noble minds, as he was apt to be, he could resign the post of honour and ambition which was his right, leave Havelock to complete his task, and ride quietly in the advance of his column as the simple leader of a body of mounted volunteers.

Sir James Outram represented the old Company's officer, whose past, present, and future was represented by India. There are many survivors of the peculiar race to whom their friends ascribe so many virtues and their foes so many faults. But to the last he stood forward in earnest advocacy of the service with which his whole life had been associated; and it is his singular praise to have it said that he has left none envious of his fame amid those of longer service who survive him, for they all feel he was true to their cause, and never sought a ray of Imperial favour by the slightest concession of their rights.

The morning sun on Wednesday was clouded by a haze which at times thickened into a fog, but about noon the vapour was dispersed, or was thinned away, so as to admit rays of light to fall through the Abbey windows, and to tinge the aisles and nave and choir with the hues of the storied panes through which they passed. The following is a list of the noblemen and gentlemen who were present in the Jerusalem Chamber:—Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein, Duke of Argyll, Marquis of Dalhousie, Lord Keane, Lord Clyde, Mr. R. D. Mangles, Sir H. Rawlinson, Baron Hugel, Lord Chelmsford, Sir H. Havelock, Colonel Mundy, Sir J. W. Hogg, Earl of Shaftesbury, Mr. Duncan Davidson, Lieutenant-Colonel Wilby Greathed, Dr. Jackson, Mr. H. St. G. Tucker, Captain Greenhill, Mr. Western Wood, M.P., Mr. H. Forbes, Sir R. Hamilton, Mr. Allen Harden, Mr. W. Vansittart, Mr. R. Torrens, Ven. Archdeacon Sinclair, Mr. R. S. Poole, General Sir De Lacy Evans, Sir Edward Lugard, Mr. Henry Reeve, Colonel Donnelly, Colonel French, Mr. W. H. Russell, Major-General Le Mesurier, Sir James Colville, General Willoughby, Mr. A. M. Storer, Sir R. U. C. Hamilton, Sir Frederick Halliday, Sir W. Page Wood, Mr. G. Smith, Mr. J. G. Frith, Mr. R. W. Crawford, Sir J. Elphinstone, Mr. William Cubitt (ex-Lord Mayor), Warden of Merchant Taylors' Company, Warden of Grocers' Company, Colonel Jameson, Right Hon. Sir John McNeill, Sir James Fergusson, M.P., Right Hon. R. Lowe, M.P., General Russell, C.B., Sir A. Spearmen, Commodore Edgell, R.N., Captain Sotheby, C.B., Right Hon. Lord Harris, Lord Lyveden, Sir T. M'Mahon, Mr. G. Frankland, Mr. James Farish, Mr. Sebastian Dickinson, Sir Harry Parkes, Lieut.-Colonel Bowie, Hon. Arthur Kinnaid, Admiral Hargood, Sir Scudamore Steel, Mr. J. R. Dorin, Sir H. Willoughby, the Lord Mayor, Colonel Sir D. Wood, Sir P. M. Melvill, Captain Claude Clerk, and Hon. Colonel Stanley.

The following gentlemen were specially invited, and came from the residence of the deceased:—General Farquharson, Colonel Mant, Mr. William Morris, Mr. D. E. Outram, Lord Deas, Rev. G. Outram, Dr. Ogilvie, Mr. D. Greenhill, Mr. P. Davidson, Mr. William Leslie, M.P., Mr. Walter Davidson, Lord Clyde, Lord Keane, Sir G. Pollock, Sir J. Lawrence, Mr. J. P. Willoughby, Mr. W. J. Eastwick, Mr. R. D. Mangles, General Hancock, General Malcolm, Mr. J. W. Kaye, Rev. G. P. Badger, Sir George Clerk, Sir H. Rawlinson, Sir John Low, Colonel Holland, Mr. H. Ricketts, Mr. Henry Johnson, Colonel Whitelock, Colonel Sykes, M.P., Sir H. Havelock, Mr. John Glen, Mr. H. G. Gordon, Mr. T. Williamson Ramsay, Mr. F. F. Courtenay, Mr. Arthur Walce, and Major-General Le Grand Jacob.

The procession, simple in all that concerns State ceremonial, but with something more than the characteristics of a private funeral, left the late residence of the General, where he lived but for a short time before his fatal illness forced him to go abroad, at eleven o'clock, and passed from Queen's-gate Gardens down Cromwell-road, Knightsbridge, Piccadilly, St. James's-street, Pall-mall, Whitehall, Parliament-street, to the West Cloister. A few carriages, with mutes, plumes, and pages, containing mourners and special friends, were followed by the long cortège of private carriages which represented in a small degree the wide area over which the influence of Sir James Outram's courage and kindness extended. At the cathedral doors the crowd was dense and respectful. There the procession was received by the Venerable the Dean, by Canons Wordsworth, Jennings, Cureton, Nepean, the Rev. Precentor Haden, and the dignitaries of the Abbey. The coffin was taken up on the shoulders of men who had stood beside their Chief in his march to Lucknow and in the weary vigils of the Alumbagh, and well did the bronzed faces and medals, the scarlet coats and plumed bonnets of the Mackenzie Highlanders become that sacred place when need was to do honour to an old soldier. The medals of Lucknow and the bars of the Relief and Siege crossing the streaked riband of red and white on their breasts guaranteed their fitness for the office. There were twelve sergeants and non-commissioned officers, and a piper of her Majesty's 78th, who had come with Colonel Lockhart, C.B., Captain Boome, and Quartermaster Skrive, to offer the last service they could to him for whom they would have laid down their lives, as often they had at his orders exposed them to every chance of battle.

Through the sacred portal passed nodding plume, and heaving shoulder, and martial figure, and all that could die of him whom so many had assembled to honour. The mourners followed the coffin—first, the only son of the deceased, now Sir Francis Outram; then the other mourners and the noblemen and gentlemen specially invited. As the procession entered the choir, they who had been assembled in the Jerusalem Chamber were marshalled two and two and marched through the cloisters into the Nave, where they met the procession and fell in with it, advancing in due order to the choir, where seats were reserved for all the invited. The body of the Nave was filled with people, and high above their heads peered down from the galleries the Westminster boys, who, fresh from the form where Warren Hastings sat, should not forget that in the land where Outram won his fame there is yet a great career for good and brave and kindly natures. The bright faces of these English youths would have touched him to the heart, for he was peculiarly susceptible of ingenuous homage, and there were in the train following his coffin some who, as they saw those young eyes and eager glances fixed on the procession, haply remembered the day when, in the heat and fire of Lucknow, he dismounted from his horse to protect a poor native lad whose parents had been slain, and who sat weeping by the roadside. From the organ stole grandly out the solemn declaration in which the Christian Church speaks for the faith of the dead and proclaims the doctrine of his salvation,—“I am the Resurrection and the Life.” The pauses were filled by the measured tramp of feet—the feet of warrior, statesman, and civilian, who are gliding fast to the world of history themselves; and then came the declaration of their hope when all is over, and that crowning time has come to which warrior, statesman, and civilian must do reverence,—“I know that my Redeemer liveth.” So, with solemn chant and organ peal, the Highlanders bear the body to the choir-gate, and there it rests for a time while the procession, filing into the choir, resolves itself into lines of grave, sombre faces. Croft's rendering of the finest expression of our human helplessness and poverty, “We brought nothing into this world,” had barely faded away in the remotest aisles, when the 100th Psalm was heard, as Purcell alone could interpret it, in all its grandeur and comprehensiveness of our mortal state and temporary glories. The Dean of Westminster, while the coffin rested under the organ loft, read the funeral service in a manner worthy of the purest, simplest, and grandest ritual known to Christian Churches; and when the burning words of the great Apostle had passed away, the Highlanders reverently took up their burden once more, and the procession, issuing out of the choir, followed the coffin to the space in the centre of which, carved out in the honoured earth, was the last resting-place of James Outram. It was with the softest, tenderest music that the body of the soldier was lowered to the grave. The service was most impressively and beautifully given. When the formula “Ashes to ashes, dust to dust,” was executed, one stout Highlander, who had doubtless faced death for many a weary night and cheerless day in the Alumbagh, wiped with his cuff the tears that still flowed down his cheek. A bright gleam of sunshine, which could not but speak of hopes beyond that yawning chasm, shone more brightly out as the choir sang “I heard a voice from Heaven.” And then to the vast, massive roll of the “Dead March” in Saul, in which Handel seems to have embodied human sorrow and grief, the gathering round the grave was slowly dissolved, and James Outram was left, not alone in his glory, but in the midst of all that England can give to make the death of her servants peace.—The Times, March 26.

In the list of those who were present at and took part in the proceedings of the Outram funeral, the names of Sir Charles Wood, of the Under Secretaries of State for India, the several members of the Council of India, and the Secretaries of the India-office, who attended in a body to pay the last honours to the deceased general, were omitted. We understand that, by a resolution of the Secretary of State for India in Council, the funeral was, by permission of the family, conducted at the public expense.—The Times, March 27.

INDIAN BRANCH RAILWAY.

The first ordinary meeting of this company was held yesterday, at the London Tavern; Mr. William Dent in the chair.

The report having been read,

The Chairman, in moving its adoption, expressed regret at the absence of the Marquis of Tweeddale, the chairman of the company, and read a letter showing the great interest he took in the success of the undertaking. He believed that Mr. Wilson, their able engineer, was the first to propose to the Government of India a plan for constructing a system of branch railways, at a small cost, having light rails, a narrow gauge, and a light working stock. Mr. Wilson was the resident engineer on the section of the East Indian Railway from Burdwan to Rajmahal, about 100 miles in length; and when that section was completed, his engagement terminated, and he then proceeded to carry out his system for branch lines. The first branch line proposed by him would form a junction with the section of the East Indian Railway, which he had so successfully carried out to completion; and he was, therefore, well acquainted with the wants of the district. The first line was from the Nulhattee station to Moorshedabad, 27 miles in length, which was now completed for traffic. The great trunk lines in India, without such subsidiary lines as the one just completed, would not fulfil the expectations originally formed of them with respect to traffic. The rails were 35 lbs. to the yard, the engines with coke and water did not exceed fourteen or fifteen tons weight, and the speed was not to be more than fifteen or sixteen miles an hour. There was no doubt the engines could travel at thirty or forty miles an hour, but that would involve great expense, and not be necessary for the object intended. It was the speed that killed on railways as well as on the road. The branch lines would not require great speed, and were only intended for improved communication, as feeders to the great trunk lines. He then adverted to the objections made by persons, in the first instance, to taking up shares in the company because interest was not guaranteed by the Government, but since that time a more favourable view was entertained of the prospects of the undertaking as to remuneration. Although they had not a guarantee, they had a subsidy from the Government equivalent to £1,000 per mile in land and works. They had been most cordially met by the Secretary of State for India, and by the Indian Government, and he was glad to say that official routine had not interfered in any way with the expeditious progress of the works. He had every reason to believe that their first line was now open for traffic. By the last mail they had been informed that all the materials sent out to India had arrived there safely. Their engineer, Mr. Wilson, fully expected that the new line in the course of the first year would realise from 10 to 12 per cent.—(hear, hear). He then read a paragraph under the head of “India,” which appeared in the Times of Tuesday, regarding the utility and prospects of their system of light branch railways, which could be constructed for about £3,500 a mile, instead of £12,000 a mile, the lowest average of the existing guaranteed lines. He then read extracts from Mr. Wilson's letters, showing that some valuable concessions had been made to the company respecting lines in Oude and Rohilkund, to which districts Mr. Wilson would, for the present, confine his attention. The district was about 450 miles in length, and about 100 miles in width, containing 22,000,000 of inhabitants, being 480 to the square mile, while in England the average was 332. The soil was most fertile, and everything grew luxuriantly. The traffic was very large in the district of the proposed line, from Cawnpore to Lucknow and the Gogra, which he thought should be the first line made, and the next would start from Buxar to Lucknow and Delhi. The concession of £100 a mile for twenty years was equivalent to a lump sum of £1,245 per mile. The works were all to be for a single line, with stations at convenient distances. On one of the lines Mr. Wilson had estimated the traffic at about £36 a mile a week, and on another at £25 per mile per week. The length of line from Cawnpore to Lucknow and the Gogra would be eighty miles, the line from Gogra to Bareilly and Mooradabad would be 130 miles. The proposed branch lines would be about 460 miles altogether. The estimated cost of these lines was about £4,000 a mile, and Mr. Wilson thought the returns would be very large. The population of Lucknow was 300,000, of Cawnpore 109,000, and of Mooradabad 59,000. The Board proposed to allow 5 per cent. interest on the capital during construction, which they thought was a proper charge, and when a certain length of the new lines was opened, and should the profits on them be greater than 5 per cent., the surplus would be appropriated to giving the shareholders a larger dividend on their capital than 5 per cent.

Colonel Yule seconded the motion for the adoption of the report. He said that Lord Elgin was reported to have stated on the occasion of opening the East Indian line to Benares that all the railways in India should be on one uniform gauge, 5½ feet, in order to prevent such a conflict as had existed for many years in England, in respect of the broad and narrow gauges. He (Colonel Yule) contended that the case in India was different, because the narrow gauge branch lines could never oppose the great lines, or compete with them. They were merely intended as feeders, and to supersede bullock trains, which could not travel in the wet season. He was fully convinced that the main lines would not pay unless fed by the cheap light lines the company proposed to make. The difference in cost between £3,500 or £4,000 a mile and £16,000 a mile could not be preserved if the gauge of the main lines and branches was to be uniform.

Sir S. Donaldson fully concurred in the observations that had been made; he knew what India required, particularly in the districts proposed to be accommodated, and he thought it would be very unwise to make any change in the proposed system until it had been fairly and fully tried. He wished to know the probable amount of capital that would be required.

The Chairman said they proposed to raise £2,000,000. When they paid up £5 a share they would be able to borrow money at 5 per cent., and if they earned more it would enable them to increase the dividends. In reply to Mr. Powell, he stated that the concession was for 90 years, and that the calls would be made at intervals of three months.

Mr. Hill thought the directors should be remunerated for their services.

Mr. Pender, M.P., quite agreed in that view. He wished the proprietors not to be too sanguine as to having large dividends; at the same time he thought they had a good concern if they could manage it properly. Four hundred and sixty miles of cheap railway was a large undertaking, and their profits would depend upon the result of each section. Should the traffic hereafter become so great as to require a wider tract and heavier engines and carriages on some of their lines, they could be relaid with heavier rails, and the gauge could be widened to the full width of the trunk lines.

Resolutions were passed adopting the report, authorising the directors to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the paid-up capital during construction, commencing from the 1st of April next; authorising a further issue of 50,000 shares of £10 each, to be offered rateably to the registered shareholders; electing Messrs. Coleman, Turquand, and Young as auditors, the remuneration not to exceed £50 per annum; the meeting recorded its opinion that remuneration should be awarded to the directors from the commencement, and that the amount should be fixed by them.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and directors concluded the proceedings.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morian, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

23, Cannon-street West St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

BY DAVID THOMAS ANSTED, M.A., F.R.S., &c.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NAFTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nafel and M. Petere Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenæum, Nov. 15, 1862.

ALLEN'S

MAPS OF INDIA & CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £3. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £2. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of the PUNJAB and SIKH TERRITORY. On one sheet, 5s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 6s.

MAP of AFGHANISTAN, and the ADJACENT COUNTRIES. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

MAP of CHINA, from the most Authentic Sources of Information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 11s.

MESSRS. WM. H. ALLEN AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN INQUIRY into the THEORIES of HISTORY.—CHANCE, LAW, WILL with Special Reference to the Principles of the Positive Philosophy. 8vo. cloth, 15s.

"This is both an able and an interesting book; for the writer, while an accurate and in some respects an original thinker, has also the command of a clear and animated style. The general scope of the book is the refutation of that naked positivism of which M. Comte is the apostle. . . . Of the whole work we can confidently say that it is one to be read by every man interested in these questions. It is a weighty treatise, and an important contribution to philosophy."—The Press, August 16, 1862.

"Written to combat certain opinions which have lately been gaining ground with some classes of thinkers, this treatise is well-timed. With no more boldness than is proper, the author claims that the views of wise men in former ages shall not be disregarded without good reason, and that nothing new and improved shall be accepted simply because of its impudence. His own language throughout is moderate and logical. A Conservative on principle, it is a part of his conservative belief in the steady progress of mankind to seek for the development of new thoughts in every age of human history, and ready to accept all that bears the stamp of truth. In a book full of argument, and occupying just that border-land of metaphysics which is harder to tread than the defined circle of metaphysics itself, it would be easy to discover discrepancies of thought and contradictions of terms; but the faults are few, and the merits many."—Examiner, Aug. 16, 1862.

A SHORT TRIP IN HUNGARY and TRANSYLVANIA in the SPRING of 1862. By Professor D. T. ANSTED. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"Professor Ansted's descriptions are written with a neatness attesting the accuracy of a scientific observer's eyes. His volume is one both of value and entertainment: a book calculated to turn the thought of tourists down the Danube."—Athenæum, Aug. 16, 1862.

"Many a tourist this autumn will have cause to thank Professor Ansted for introducing them to a new and comparatively unknown country. . . . It would be difficult to find a more agreeable companion for a tour than the author of this interesting volume."—The Press, Aug. 9, 1862.

THE SCIENCE of HOME LIFE. By ALBERT J. BERNAYS, Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, and of Practical Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital Medical and Surgical College (late Lecturer on Chemistry and Practical Chemistry at St. Mary's Hospital), &c., &c. Illustrated by several cuts. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s.

MEMORABLE EVENTS of MODERN HISTORY. By J. G. EDGAR. Author of the "Boyhood of Great Men," &c., &c. With Illustrations. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"A practical writer, with a high sense of his obligations as an instructor of children, Mr. J. G. Edgar never makes a contribution to juvenile literature that does not deserve a certain measure of commendation. We can conscientiously recommend it ('Memorable Events') as a work at the same time entertaining and useful."—Athenæum, March 6, 1863.

"Mr. Edgar's style is clear, vigorous, simple, and unaffected, and from the first page to the last the reader is instinctively conscious of standing in the presence of a gentleman and a scholar. Though writing for the benefit of the rising generation Mr. Edgar possesses the enviable talent of attracting at the same time the attention of young men and grey-beards, and of so describing events as to suggest many a topic for grave reflection. His last ('Memorable Events') is certainly not his least work, and not only confirms but enhances his previous reputation as an earnest, agreeable, high-minded, and reliable chronicler of human achievements and human follies and failures."—Spectator.

"A most acceptable present for the youth of both sexes."—Observer.

THE FORESTS and GARDENS of SOUTH INDIA. By HUGH CLAPHORN, M.D., F.L.S., Conservator of Forests, Madras Presidency. Post 8vo., with Illustrations, price 12s.

"Full of valuable information and thoroughly reliable in all its statements."—Daily News.

THE HISTORY of CHESS: from the Time of the Early Invention of the Game in India till the Period of its Establishment in Western and Central Europe. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D., 8vo., cloth, 15s.

"This volume will be a welcome addition to the library of every lover of the noble game of chess. Our author makes a stout fight for the Hindus as the inventors of the game, and adduces many cogent proofs in support of his opinion. He shows how the game is played in other countries, how it has been modified both in the names of the pieces and the names of the game by the peculiarities of the country or the national temperament of the inhabitants; and then traces the steps by which it has arrived at its present place of honour in civilised and intellectual Europe. The book is, therefore, full of curious lore that can on other and higher subjects than chess-playing, for it involves dissertations on ethnology, comparative zoology, the dispersion and settlement of nations, and the manners and customs of different countries, to a degree that would not be at all anticipated by a person who contented himself by reading the title-page. All this information is given, not in any dry, repulsive, or even technical style, but easily, clearly, and in an animated manner—the style that would naturally be adopted by a gentleman and man of the world."—Herald.

SIN: its Causes and Consequences. An Attempt to Investigate the Origin, Nature, Extent, and Results of Moral Evil. A Series of Lent Lectures. By the Rev. HENRY CHRISTMAS, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

"These lectures are learned, eloquent, and earnest, and though they approach the 'limits of religious thought,' they do not transgress those limits; and they present the reader with a comprehensive review, based upon revelation, of the nature, extent, and consequences of moral evil or sin, both in this world and in the world to come."—Civil Service Gazette.

A COURSE of ELEMENTARY MATHEMATICS, for the Use of Candidates for Admission into either of the Military Colleges; of Applicants for Appointments in the Home or Indian Civil Service; and of Mathematical Students generally. 2nd Edition. In one closely printed 8vo. volume. Pp. 648. Price 12s.

"In the work before us he has digested a complete Elementary Course by aid of his long experience as a teacher and a writer; and he has produced a very useful book. . . . Mr. Young has not allowed his own tastes to rule the distribution, but has adjusted his parts with the skill of a veteran."—Athenæum, March 9, 1861.

"Mr. Young is well-known as the author of undoubtedly the best treatise on the 'Theory of Equations' which is to be found in our language—a treatise distinguished by originality of thought, great learning, and admirable perspicuity. Nor are these qualities wanting in the work which we are reviewing. . . . Considering the difficulty of the task which Mr. Young has undertaken to discharge, and the extent of useful knowledge he has succeeded in imparting accurately and lucidly in so small a compass, we can without hesitation commend this work to the public as by far the best elementary course of mathematics in our language."—The London Review, April 6, 1861.

THE RUSSIANS AT HOME: Unpolitical Sketches, showing what Newspapers they read; what Theatres they frequent; and how they Eat, Drink, and Enjoy themselves; with other matter relating chiefly to Literature, Music, and to Places of Historical and Religious Interest in and about Moscow. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Esq. 2nd Edition, with Illustrations. Price 10s. 6d.

"It is a book that we can sincerely recommend, not only to those who are desirous of abundant and reliable information respecting the social economy of the Russian people, but to those who seek an entertaining volume, that may be perused in any part with both profit and amusement."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"This is not only one of the most amusing books that we have read for a long time, but also the best and most reliable account of Russian life and manners which has hitherto been given to the public."—Spectator.

"The tone is so genial, the descriptions are so vigorously touched, and the author's perfect acquaintance with his subject is so marked throughout, that his sketches are sure to delight any one into whose hands they may fall."—Literary Gazette.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MISS CORNELIA KNIGHT, Lady Companion to the Princess Charlotte of Wales, with Extracts from her Journals and Anecdote Books. Fourth Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, £1. 6s.

"Why we should turn to these volumes as among the most interesting of the recent season, will be sufficiently evident as we indicate their contents."—Times.

"Of the popularity of these volumes, on account of their historical as well as gossiping merits, there can be no doubt whatever."—Athenæum.

THE HISTORY of the OPERA, from MONTEVERDE to DONIZETTI. By SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Second Edition, 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, price £1. 1s.

"Completely master of his subject, and possessing a ready and pleasing pen, Mr. Edwards in these volumes gives us an exceedingly interesting history of operatic performances."—Herald.

"It is one of those treasures of amusing anecdote that may be taken up and laid down at a minute's notice."—Times.

THE REPUBLIC of FOOLS: being the History of the State and People of Abdera in Thrace. Translated from the German of C. M. von Wieland. By the Rev. H. CHRISTMAS. 2 vols., post 8vo., cloth, 18s.

"As a prose satire, 'The History of the Abderites' yields only in breadth of humour, and pungency of wit, to Dean Swift's immortal travels of Captain Lemuel Gulliver, and of works of that class we know of none in any language that can compare with either of the two."—Observer.

"Here is enjoyment for many a Christmas to come, for many thousands of English boys, and many thousands of English men and women. Unfortunately for the world Pisistratus Caxton departed this life without having made any contribution towards the great history of human folly, save, indeed, by the records of his own. Mr. Christmas has given us something even better in his translation of Wieland's Abderites; and in the simplest, most racy, and vernacular English, has enriched our literature with another character of the family dear to mankind, of the Quixotes, Gullivers, and other human foils of human self-love and vanity. If the addition to our shelves of a book to delight the young and instruct the old overflowing with wit, fun, drollery, inexpressible, wisdom, depth, and knowledge is an achievement deserving of national thanks, we undertake to convey our share to Mr. Christmas, fearing only lest we should not have thanked him sufficiently."—London Review.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraven on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND, this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For Coughs, Asthma, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

SAVE AND SUFFER.—Day by day are cases of ulcers, wounds, sores, contractions, and deormities cured by these well-esteemed remedies after all other known means had been tried in vain. Varicose veins and all descriptions of sore, ulcerated, and bad legs, which seem to defy the best surgical skill, succumb in a short time to the soothing, healing, and purifying properties of Holloway's Ointment and Pills. They operate both locally and constitutionally; they strengthen both capillaries and nerves, and regulate the circulation of the blood. The most valued testimonials are constantly received from persons whom chance directed to Holloway's safe and certain remedies, and which effected a cure even after the constitution seemed thoroughly broken down.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenaeum, March 21, 1863.

"It is a work which politicians, journalists, and all men of general information cannot at this juncture well do without."—Literary Times, March 21, 1863.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW

HIS Excellency the Viceroy of India reached Delhi on the 3rd of March in his almost regal progress through the Upper Provinces. He was received at the Delhi Gate by the Lieutenant-governor of the North-Western Provinces and the Commissioner of Delhi, accompanied by a large civil and military staff and two rifle corps. The progress of the cavalcade through the main street of Delhi is described as a very imposing spectacle. If Lord Elgin is a vain man his grand triumphal progress through such historic scenes, and the profound homage paid to him by native princes and nobles, must have been highly gratifying. His Excellency left Delhi on the 5th and reached Meerut on the 7th ult., where two days after he was present in the morning at a grand review of the troops, and in the evening at a magnificent ball given to himself and Lady Elgin. Sir Hugh Rose, who had joined the Governor-general at Delhi, was also on the parade and in the ball-room on the same day.

Sir Bartle Frere returned to Bombay on the 5th of March, and Sir William Mansfield on the 4th. The latter is about to proceed to Mahabeshur for the whole of the hot season.

Sir Charles Trevelyan is as active as ever, though he has completed no great change as yet.

It is said that he intends to abolish the duty on salt raised in India, and to increase the duty on imported salt. People still seem to think that he intends to relieve India of the income-tax.

The Kurrachee Bank is not in a state of much prosperity. There appears to have been some confusion in its books, which were taken away by the late manager, Mr. Plunkett, who was summonsed for that proceeding before a magistrate. Mr. Plunkett subsequently committed suicide.

The Hon. Mr. Edmonstone having resigned the post of Lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces, it was conferred on the Hon. Mr. Harrington, who almost immediately afterwards, on account of ill-health, resigned the office in favour of Mr. Drummond.

The Home Government has approved of the decision of the Bengal authorities that officers of the rank of colonel commandant are perfectly eligible for the post of Inspector of Artillery. The appointment of Inspector of Artillery is therefore now open to all officers of artillery not under the rank of colonel regimentally, and not being at the time of appointment general officers.

It is requisite we should draw attention to the fact that the lists of General Orders of her Majesty's British Forces, which have regularly appeared in our Bombay Official Gazette hitherto, are discontinued by a notification from the Adjutant-general's Office, Poona, dated Feb. 20.

The abolition of the office of the Brigade Major Queen's Troops has been decreed by the same notification.

The second commission of inquiry into the loss of the Jason has resulted in the suspension of Captain Hurst's certificate, who intends to bring his case before the High Court of Appeal.

The ceremony of investing Major Blair, of the 2nd Bombay Light Cavalry, with the decoration of the Victoria Cross, was performed in the presence of the troops at Rajkote, by Major-general Sir C. T. Van Straubenzee, commanding the northern division of the army.

That stupendous railway work, the Bhore Ghaut Incline, will be fully completed by the contractors' agents, Messrs. Adamson and Clowser, by the 20th inst., and will be ready to be opened for goods traffic in the early part of April.

The Military and Orphan Funds of the Indian army are to be immediately transferred to the Crown, with all their liabilities. We suppose no changes of importance affecting present interests will be effected in the rules of these institutions, but we cannot doubt that several most important alterations will be proposed as soon as the subject is laid fully before the Home authorities. Some of the regulations still in existence were adapted to certain conditions of social life in India which have long disappeared.

The total exports of cotton from the central provinces for this season, inclusive of the balance of stock of the previous year reserved by speculators in the hope of prices rising, may be calculated to amount to from 20,000,000 to 22,000,000 of pounds (9,600 tons). This large exportation may be expected to reach the sea-board before the close of the season, about 6,000 tons for Bombay, 2,000 tons for Mirzapore and Calcutta, and 1,600 tons for Cuttack.

The present cotton cultivation of Mysore is estimated at 175,000 acres.

Orders have been sent out from the Horse Guards for the reduction of three cavalry regiments by a troop, viz., the 19th, 20th, and 21st Hussars. There will be one captain, one lieutenant, one cornet, and seventy-three troopers returned as supernumeraries till they are absorbed.

We are glad to learn that the Jynteah rebels are now indicating a disposition to give us no more trouble. In the last collision with them, fifty prisoners had been taken by our troops.

The contract for the weekly mail to Bombay has been given to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company; and the new service between Aden and Bombay will be commenced as soon as the requisite number of ships can be brought out from England and placed on the line.

There is a rumour that Government, on the recommendation of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, intends to give full, instead of half batta to the officers of regiments stationed in Poona and Bombay, to compensate them for the vast increase in the rents of houses and prices of provisions in the last five or six years.

Sir Charles Jackson, the Senior Puisne Judge of our High Court, after a sojourn in India of fourteen years, is now on his way home.

It is uncertain where the Lieut.-governor of Bengal will take up his quarters during the hot weather. It is expected that he will go either to the Neilgherries or to Darjeeling.

The Hon. M. Eden is about to return to England on account of ill-health.

The French Steam Company known as the "Messageries Impériales," are at present compelled to charter vessels to carry on their traffic, owing to an accident having occurred to the Erymanthe, and the Government steamer Arracan has been chartered for the passage to Galle and back for Rs. 10,000. An interesting letter from a correspondent of ours gives some particulars respecting the character of the accommodation, &c., in the boats of the French Steam Company, from which we gather that the French boats will not be very formidable rivals of those of the Peninsula and Oriental Company, unless "very great improvements are introduced."

Commodore Lord John Hay arrived at Bombay on the 1st of March, by her Majesty's steam-ship Odin, from Cannanore.

Major-general Farrell has resigned the command of the Mhow Division, and is about to return to England.

The Bombay Government contemplate leasing the dockyard to a private company at one and a half lakhs of rupees per annum.

The traffic of the G. I. P. Railway (open 495½ miles) for the week ending the 1st March, 1863, amounted to Rs. 94,443-0-1, against Rs. 73,664-9-6 for the corresponding week last year (open 438 miles). The Bhore Ghat incline of the G. I. P. Railway was expected to be ready to be opened for goods traffic on the 20th March.

Mr. Syud Ahmed Khan, the principal Sudder Ameen of Ghazee-pore, has commenced the publication of a work which will, at all events, be regarded as a literary curiosity by the religious world of Europe, receive it how it may. It is no other than a respectful commentary on the Bible by a believer in the Koran. Such is this Mahomedan's liberality that he contends that the Old and New Testaments being truly sacred records ought to be implicitly accepted and devoutly followed by both Christians and Mahomedans. This Mussulman is something better than Bishop Colenso, Zulu.

Dr. Colin Paterson, M.D., A.M., C.M., Deputy Inspector general of Hospitals, died at Nag-pore last month.

Brigadier T. Tapp, C.B., Aide-de-camp to the Queen, has been appointed brigadier of the first class, and to command the garrison of Bombay in succession to Brigadier Liddell.

His Highness Maharajah Scindia, K.S.I., having received permission to visit Bombay on the conclusion of the present ceremonies in the North-Western Provinces, his Excellency the Governor-general is pleased to sanction the deputation of Lieut. A. G. Mayne, adjutant of the 2nd regiment Central India Horse, to be in attendance on the Maharajah.

It is currently rumoured in native society in Bengal that the infamous Nana of Bithoor is still living, and that he visited Benares last year for a short time. Doubts are also entertained as to the death of Bala Rao, who, with Tania Topce, Azzamoolah Khan, Jowalla Persand, and the Nana, directed the massacre of the Cawnpore garrison in the boats.

A committee has been appointed by Government, and certain rules passed for the future care and maintenance of the garden containing the remains of those who were massacred at Cawnpore in July, 1857. It is designated the "Memorial Garden," and it has been placed in charge of an European custodian, under the supervision of the committee.

Colonel Tapp, C.B., of the 103rd Regt., Royal Bombay Fusiliers, has been appointed to succeed Brigadier Liddell in the command of the garrison of Bombay, with the rank of a brigadier of the first class.

The eldest daughter of his Excellency Sir William Denison, the Governor of Madras, has been married to Mr. James Wilkinson Brecks, Private Secretary to his Excellency. His Excellency's brother, Colonel Denison, has been gazetted Military Secretary to the Governor, vice Captain Glover, who has resigned the office and been appointed first Aide-de-Camp.

We noticed briefly in our last that the Ranees of Madura (Madras Presidency) had been sentenced to be hung for a cold-blooded murder. The sentence has been confirmed by the High Court of Appellate Jurisdiction. It appears that a dancing-girl deposed that a corpse had been buried in a garden, and that the Ranees had perpetrated a murder. The dead body of the Ranees' sister was found, wrapped up in a carpet, at a great depth in the earth. The murdered girl, it seems, had dishonoured the family by an improper connection with a Zemindar at Madura. Out of revenge, the Ranees cut the poor girl's throat with a razor, and the family was thus yet more disgraced by a murder, and by the head of the family being strung up on the gallows. The Ranees and two others proved to have been in some way implicated were sentenced to transportation for life.

ERRATUM.—A Mr. Ricketts was mentioned as the late Mr. Ricketts in the number of this paper for March 16, in a paragraph taken from one of the Indian journals. A Mr. Henry Ricketts writes to tell us that he is still in the land of the living. Is he quite sure that he is the party that was alluded to?

BENGAL.

THE FRENCH OVERLAND ROUTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—As so much has been written and said in praise of the new French company, it is really time that the true state of the case should be laid before that large section of the British public which is interested in whatever concerns the means of communication between Europe and the East. Permit me, therefore, to record, as briefly as possible, my own experiences as a passenger by that line. It was on the 10th of January that I embarked at Marseilles on board the Labour-donnais, in company with a motley crowd of French, English, Dutch, Swiss, and Spanish travellers, bound to various ports between Alexandria and Shanghai. The steamer was an entirely new ship, and had never been to sea except on a short trial trip, and, consequently, everything was in a very incomplete and unsatisfactory condition. The first mishap was the fall of a spar before we were out of the harbour, and as it was made of green timber it snapped in two and narrowly missed killing a Sister of the Sacré Cœur. At Messina we were obliged to leave our anchor, the donkey-engine proving its claim to that title by refusing to work. Then, the engine twice broke down,—the first time for eight hours, and the second for four or five. On the latter occasion, the vessel fell off into the trough of the sea, and rolled about in the most helpless manner, to the undisguised terror of the passengers. The destruction of crockery and cabin furniture was something incredible, and became at last a perfect nuisance. However, in the course of time we reached Alexandria, and only one day beyond the proper date. Another day was lost through the alleged dilatoriness of the Transit Company, but much more likely through the bungling mismanagement of the pursers, who from first to last proved to be utterly incompetent and profoundly ignorant of their duties. At Suez we found the Alphée awaiting us, a vessel said to be a bon marcheur, though she seldom exceeded nine knots an hour, and barely averaged eight. The reason assigned was the foulness of her bottom, and also the indifferent fitting of her cylinders, which became heated every two or three days, and compelled the engine to be stopped. Whatever the cause, the consequence was that the P. and O. steamer which started from Suez twelve hours after the Alphée, taking out the mails despatched from Marseilles fifty-four hours after the departure of the Labourdonnais, passed us in the Red Sea, and steamed out of the harbour at Aden very shortly after we made our appearance. When it came to our own turn to go out to see the French pilot contrived to run us upon a sand bank, upon which we bumped and grated for four hours. Our next exploit was to set fire to the awning in some fifty places, so that it came at last to resemble a sieve—the hose being frequently turned on to put out the smouldering flames. Finally, we made Point de Galle by a lucky fluke, for nobody on board knew our exact position within fifteen miles. In that port we were detained three days in consequence of the breaking down of the Erymanthe after leaving Calcutta on her way to Ceylon. The piston came to grief, it was said, and as the company have no spare ships they were obliged to charter the Penang for £5,000 for the voyage to and from that island. But though inconvenienced by the smallness of the vessel, the passengers all rejoiced to find themselves under the guidance of British officers, for a feeling of distrust was entertained by every one, including the foreigners themselves, with regard to the seamanship of the French crews. There was, indeed, a superabundance of officers, who took very good care of themselves—occupying the best seats on deck, and generally comporting themselves as personages of infinite importance—but of sailors there were scarcely enough to take in the mainsail. The machinery, as I have already remarked, was continually getting out of order, and a series of mishaps marked the entire voyage. Nor was this all. The wines consisted of a detestable compound supposed to be Marsala, which was doled out as carefully as if it had been Imperial Tokay, and of the very commonest vin ordinaire, while the brandy was a coarse, fiery eau de vie, manufactured from whisky and barley. Than the cookery nothing could be worse. The meat itself was so bad in the first instance, that the most exquisite sauces would hardly have made it eatable, whereas the abominable concoctions with which it was served up only rendered it still more unpalatable. The French passengers complained of the fare quite as bitterly as the English, and one French gentleman who came on to Calcutta was so disgusted that he intends to remain here until he can obtain a passage to China in a P. and O. steamer, rather than encounter a second time the delays and discomforts of the Messageries Imperiales. But if the first-class passengers had good reason to complain of the treatment they experienced, that endured by the second-class was perfectly disgraceful. These were allowed only two meals a day, at ten and at five, each consisting of a single dish of inferior meat, indifferent bread, and half a bottle of wretched Bordeaux, and for this they were charged two francs a day, in addition to their passage money, and yet another half franc for a cup of coffee in the early morning. Nay more—a second-class passenger who came on board at Pondicherry was compelled to take his meals on deck in the midst of the lascars, and close to the butcher's department. He was further refused the use of a glass, or a knife and fork, and was told that if he did not like what was given to him he might go without. Indeed, a Madrassee—the servant of an English officer who joined us at Madras—was coolly informed that he could have nothing to eat, nor did he get anything until his master arranged with the Serang that he should feed with him for eight annas per diem. Not one of us, be assured, will ever again set foot in a French boat, unless very great improvements are introduced. But why need the Directors care for the complaints of passengers, so long as they go on receiving £20,000 per mensem from the Government? We ourselves were politely told that we were only so many colis, or packages, to be delivered at various destinations.

You will have seen by the local papers that Dennis Hely has been acquitted of the charge of homicide, and very justly so. The case, indeed, broke down through the eagerness of the witnesses to prove too much. Like Falstaff at Gads-hill, they swore it was so dark you could not see your hand, yet would have taken their oath to the Kendal-green. But, in fact, he was innocent of all complicity in the affray, though he arrived just as all was over, and for the rest of his days will no doubt be convinced that the end of a feast is better than either the beginning or end of a fray. He had been sculling himself about in a small boat of his own, and was attracted to the spot by the report of firearms, and the loud shouts of the natives, but the affair was quite over before he made his appearance. The worst feature in the case was his flight to Burmah, but in this he yielded to unwise counsels. Sir Robert Napier is said to be so thoroughly convinced of his innocence that he is trying to get him an appointment under Government.

On Saturday I made my first trip on an Indian railway, and am truly thankful that I had to go no further than Serampore. The carriage in which I travelled would be a disgrace to any line. A dirty, dingy, stuffy old box, as great an anachronism as a post-chaise would be in England. Then, the engine broke down after going four or five miles, and we had to wait for the next train. The reason is obvious. There being only one set of rails beyond Birdwan, and only two to that distance, only a very few trains can be started, certainly not enough to accommodate the usual number of passengers. Consequently, very heavy trains, consisting of twenty to thirty carriages crammed full of natives, as if they were so much live stock—E-sex, calves, pigs, or sheep—have to be employed to the manifest destruction of the engines. But on the subject of railways I shall have much to say when I become a little better "posted up" as to details. In the meantime you may form a pretty accurate notion of the mismanagement that prevails from the simple fact that the ruling powers of, at least, the East Indian Railway are doing their best to check the transit of cotton, because it is more bulky and less profitable than other goods. This is a positive fact. H.

THE MESSAGERIES IMPERIALES COMPANY.

The announcement that a French Company was about to be established for the purpose of affording a direct channel of communication between Continental Europe and the East, was hailed with feelings of unmitigated satisfaction by all classes of the Anglo-Indian community. It was confidently expected that such a formidable competition—for it was well known that the projected Company would be liberally supported by the French Government—would compel the P. and O. to exert themselves to the utmost to maintain their position as the successors of Genoa and Venice. Their staunchest partisans were forced to admit that Jeshurun had waxed somewhat too fat and lazy, and that a little wholesome stimulus to his dormant energies would be to the advantage of the public. Nor were these anticipations in any way unreasonable, and indeed, to a certain extent, they have already been realized. Vessels of greater speed, and possessed of more ample accommodation for passengers, have been placed upon the line, while very necessary improvements have been introduced into the Commissariat Department. This tardy recognition of past shortcomings may, perhaps, be regarded as the foreshadowing of the better times that are yet to come; but it certainly cannot be accepted as anything more than an acknowledgment of error, and for which the British residents in India are chiefly indebted to the threatened rivalry of the Messageries Imperiales. But scarcely had the last notes died away of the flourish of trumpets which announced the inauguration of the French overland route, when dismal forebodings began to possess the minds of the most sanguine. Gradually it began to be whispered abroad that inferior wines, greasy cookery, untidy waiters, and supercilious pursers were rather the rule than the exception on board the floating cabarets destined to ply between Marseilles and Shanghai. Quailish passengers—very likely excellent citizens, though indifferent sailors—complained bitterly of the nauseous odour of bad tobacco which penetrated into the very cabins, and rendered life a burden too heavy to be borne. Others, a shade less squeamish, were yet disgusted with the spectacle of a deck converted into a flat spittoon, and strewn with the ends of cigars, fragments of tow or paper, and the sucked skins of oranges, or the shells of nuts and almonds. Some few even questioned the seamanship of the crew, while they grumbled at the multitude of officials who occupied the best seats everywhere, and almost monopolised the services of the unclean and ill-favoured attendants. The frequent accidents that befell the machinery, the "lubberly" manner in which sails were set or taken in, the fidgetty interference of "the Administration" with the most trivial details, and the utter indifference manifested with regard to the comfort and convenience of passengers, are mentioned in every quarter in terms of the severest reprobation. But in no respect has the new company more grievously disappointed the just expectations of its well-wishers than in the treatment of second-class passengers. However incredible it may appear, it is stated as a positive fact that the food supplied to these unfortunate individuals is not only objectionable as to quality, but actually insufficient in quantity, and that even for this indigestible garbage a charge of two shillings per diem is made in addition to the nominal fare. In short, the French Overland Route has thus far proved a miserable failure. Want of punctuality, unwholesome and distasteful diet, slack and uncivil attendance, incompetent pursers, and a general absence of comfort and cleanliness, are alleged as its chief characteristics, and which are certainly not palliated by the enormous subsidy from the French Government that secures the shareholders from the risks and anxieties incidental to ordinary speculations. Such a complete fiasco is much to be regretted, but we still cling to the hope that when the authorities at home become aware of the mismanagement displayed by their subordinates, immediate steps will be taken to prevent the repetition of the manifold blunders that have marked the outward voyages of the Labourdonnaix and the Alphée, and which will not be easily forgotten by those whose cruel destiny condemned them to suffer for the faults of others.—Harkara, Feb. 27.

THE VICEROYAL TOUR.

His Excellency the Viceroy reached Delhi on the 3rd instant, in his official progress through the Upper Provinces of India. He was received by two regiments of rifles, one of them the 2nd Battalion of the Rifle Brigade, the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, the Commissioner of Delhi, and a large staff of secretaries and officers, civil and military, outside the Delhi gate. The meeting of these great functionaries being briefly over, the Lieutenant-Governor supported the Viceroy on the right, and the Commissioner of Delhi on the left, and the procession then set out. No more striking scene could be conceived than the passage of the cavalcade down the Chandni Chouth, the principal street of Delhi. The city still contains some magnificent buildings; the palace of the Moguls towers majestically all along the eastern quarter, though much has been done to mar its noble proportions by the construction of hideous baseless glacis all around it; and the Viceroy was greatly struck with the graceful outlines of the Jumma Masjid, which now stands out prominently before the palace, and the Kootub Minar, both of which attracted his lordship's particular attention. Many well-known historic faces were seen on this occasion; but the entire absence of all but one or two natives of high rank, and these belonging to the municipal commission of the city of Delhi, was very remarkable. The trottoirs were crowded with the populace, and the balconies and tops of houses were studded with the representatives of all manner of castes, tribes, religions, races and nations. Discontented, scowling Mussulmans were, of course, not wanting, in whose minds reflections as to the past must have been stirring; while in the shops the more mild Hindoo might be seen in great force, exhibiting his wares to the best advantage, and probably "calculating" that a visit from the English Viceroy would be more profitable to him than a raid of the Shahzadahs under the Mogul Empire. The Viceroy having made his public entry into Delhi, in strict accordance with the official programme, reached his camp about eight o'clock, and the troops were all under cover by nine A.M. At noon there was a crowded levee of all classes, at which his Excellency received the officers of the garrison, and the whole of the civil and military functionaries of the province. His Lordship left Delhi on the 5th and reached Meerut on the 7th inst. On the 9th there was a grand review of the troops at Meerut, including the greater part of the Viceroy's escort. On the same evening Lord and Lady Elgin and Sir Hugh Rose were entertained at a ball given by the station. On the 10th inst. the Viceroy's camp moved on towards Roorkee. His Excellency Sir Hugh Rose joined the camp of the Viceroy at Delhi.

THE VICEROY AND RAILWAY EXTENSION.

Events conspire to make the period of Lord Elgin's administration one chiefly of rapid material progress in India, and his lordship's address at the Benares dinner shows how fully he is aware of this. What Lord Dalhousie initiated we trust Lord Elgin will live to see completed—a perfect system of trunk railways from coast to coast and sea to sea, constructed under a State guarantee at a cost of sixty millions sterling. What Lord Canning began Lord Elgin has declared his determination to perfect—a network of branch railways constructed at one-fifth of the cost of the main lines they are intended to feed, by private enterprise, which the State will aid to the extent of a thousand pounds a mile, or one-fourth of their cost. The three young noblemen who, thirty five years ago, were students at the same college, and were fired by similar ambition to distinguish themselves in the service of their country, have thus been used by Providence to do more for the enlightenment of Southern Asia than any dynasty however famous which has ruled the peninsula for centuries, or any other three Governors in English days, though their conquests might be as wide as Clive's and Wellesley's, and their administrative philanthropy as great as Bentinck's. Inheritors of their deeds, Dalhousie and his successor eclipsed their predecessors' reputation and have passed away. Lord Elgin is no less eager to follow in their footsteps.

Desirous to link his administration with private enterprise, the Viceroy devoted the greater part of his speech to a statement of the conditions on which the union is to be effected, and of the advantages it is as sure to confer on India as on America. Admitting that sad experience had proved the extent to which extravagance, delay, speculation and public apathy had been caused by the guarantee system, Lord Elgin announced that he was prepared to aid every railway project he approved of by a subvention, if it adhered to the uniform railway gauge of five and a half feet, and did not exceed in cost of construction four thousand pounds a mile. Already the Indian Branch Railway and Tramway Companies are working on these conditions. Sir John Login is now arranging for a long tramway feeder to the Bombay and Baroda line; and the Branch Railway Company, with its energetic projector, Mr. Wilson, has engaged to construct a series of light railways, the very extent of which takes away our breath. First, the experimental line of thirty-five miles, from Nulhattee on the East India line to Jeeagunge opposite Berhampore, will be open in two months. It is on the narrow gauge of four feet, but its successors will adopt the uniform larger gauge. From Berhampore another local line will run to Bugwangola on the Ganges, and thus all the rich produce of Rajshye, Moorshedabad and Beerbhoom, emphatically the silk and indigo countries of Bengal, will be drained. But these lines are trifling compared with the long ones sanctioned, or about to be so, in the North-West. Mr. Wilson is about to lay down a light railway from Cawnpore right across the Ganges and Gogra Doab through Lucknow and Fyzabad to Byramghat on the Gogra. A body of native capitalists have engaged him to construct a bridge over the Ganges at Cawnpore, which they will place under the Act about to be passed for private enterprises. Higher up the Branch Railway Company have engaged to send off another feeder at right angles to the East Indian line near Koorjah, in the Jumna and Ganges Doab. It will pass through Moradabad and end at Kaladoongee, at the foot of the Himalayas. But more important than even these is a long line projected from a point on the Ganges near Ghazepore, to run through Oudh and Rohilcund between the Ganges and Gogra, crossing the two railways we have mentioned at right angles, passing through Fyzabad, Shajehanpore, Bareilly, Bijnour, and Mozuffernugger, and joining the Calcutta and Punjab line at Umballa, or some point on which Lord Elgin will decide when on the spot. Thus Oudh and Rohilcund, the latter so long neglected but so wealthy, will be opened up, and the commerce of Northern India be poured into Calcutta.

Other branches must follow, and we expect soon to see the stock market deluged with projects of Indian companies. Besides the Dacca, Assam and Darjeeling extensions of the Eastern Bengal line, which, without bridges and with ferries, might be made at £3,000 a mile, a cheap line must be laid direct from the coal railways of Ranee-gunge to Patna, saving seventy miles in the direct route to Bombay; another from Patna to wealthy and superstitious Gya; another into the coal country of Singrowlee; another from Agra to Muttra. Goruckpore, with its enormous trade, has to be provided for; Orissa and Midnapore, with their traffic and temples, to which there is hardly a road, cannot be content with the canal promised by the East India Irrigation Company. Then there are the Central Provinces, the other Presidencies, and the native States. All that England wants to deluge us with her annually increasing surplus capital is men of honour, skill, and experience, who will not mislead the investing classes, and will carry out their contracts with the State. The result of all this railway extension on the people of India, as well as on England and on our Government, may be imagined from the statement of Mr. Turnbull, that during the ten years he has been making the East Indian line above ten millions sterling have passed into the hands of labourers and artisans, and the rate of wages has increased fifty per cent. Who shall estimate the results of this process, going on year after year, in enlightening the masses and establishing our rule?—Friend of India.

THE MORAVIANS IN THE HIMALAYAS.

Far away amid the snows of the Himalayas, and on the very frontier of Thibet, is a little spot called Kyelang. Here, while the Nana was butchering our women at Cawnpore, while Havellock could hardly advance to Lucknow, and our army was vainly sitting before Delhi, three German Moravians, firm in their conviction of the stability of our rule, purchased a plot of rocky ground from a Mongolian, and built a mission-house. Animated with the faith which led two of the United Brethren, as they call themselves, to immerse themselves in a South-African leper asylum for life, which sent others to labour fruitlessly for years among the Greenlanders, which made others eager to win the Cossacks to Christianity from their settlement at Sarepta, on the Wolga, these undaunted men began to lay siege to Buddhism amid circumstances which might well have appalled the most stout-hearted. The story is one of the most touching in the history of that civilisation with which England is manuring the East. It is a parallel, but of a higher kind, to that courage which kept Lumsden all solitary in Candahar watching the doubtful Ameer, and cut Montgomerie off in Cashmere surveying the mighty chain of mountains which enclose the valley, while there were those below who believed that for a time England had lost India.

The Moravians have always been eager to Christianise the Turanian tribes who roam the deserts from the Wolga and the Amur to the Indus and the Yang-tse. They began their attacks on the heathenism of these nomades from the Wolga. Just a century ago they formed a settlement at Sarepta on that river, 150 versts from Astrakhan; but not till fifty years passed away did they succeed in getting hold of the Kalmuc and Kirghis Tartars. In 1812 they translated the Bible into Kalmuc, and the head Lama of the Mongols sent not less than £550 to meet the expense of translating it into Mongol. But his priestly brethren became alarmed, and the infant community was driven out from the midst of the tribes to a little island in the Wolga, while the Greek church seized the converts and banished the Moravians from Russia. Foiled on the north, they began their efforts on the south, taking advantage of the annexation of the Punjab. In 1853, Messrs. E. Pagell and August W. Heide landed in Calcutta, and at once proceeded to the Church Mission at Kotgurb behind Simla, where they devoted themselves to the study of Thibetan and Mongolian. A Lama was their teacher, and the wandering tribes of the Sutlej valley and travellers on the Hindostan and Thibet road their occasional hearers. After fifteen months' study, at the close of March, 1855, the two Moravians resolved to begin their mission. While the snow yet lay deep on the hills, and the passes were almost blocked up, they started northward for Ladak, visiting all the Lamaseries or monasteries on their way. Through the Rotang pass, 13,000 feet above the sea, they went on foot, and only at the Bara-lacha pass, which separates the British territory of Lahoul from Ladak, did they use Yaks. At Leh, the capital, they separated, and Pagell proceeded north east to the Chinese frontier. Our Government had given them every assistance, and even Golab Sing, the ruler of Cashmere, had willingly helped them in Ladak, but the ever-jealous Tartars drove Pagell back, refusing him all food. Compelled by starvation to return, he rejoined his colleague, and they resolved to establish their mission in Lahoul, under English protection. In the summer of 1856 they began. Hewing down fifty tall pines granted them by the Assistant Commissioner, they had hardly cleared a spot some three hundred feet above the Bagha river, when winter drove them back houseless to Kotgurb. Here, however, they were joined by a third, Mr. Jaeschke, whose remarkable linguistic abilities were of material assistance. The year 1857 found them busy building at Kyelang, and in 1859 Mr. Pagell visited Calcutta, married, and took up with him two ladies sent out for his brethren. The mission was completely organised, and last year Lord William Hay and his party found it a smiling Christian home, planted in the Alpine-like solitude of Lahoul. There they are behind two ranges of the Himalayas, cut off from all civilised intercourse, snowed up for six months of the year when the thermometer falls as low as 12 deg. below zero, and depending for food on a yearly supply sent by Kullu or Simla.

Let us look at the little Moravian colony at work. If we adopt the southern route through the Rotang pass, the valley of Lahoul will strike us by its barrenness, for we have just left the fertile southern slopes of the Rotang range. If we approach from the north through Ladak by the Bara-lacha pass 16,000 feet high, we leave plains where not a blade of grass is visible, and think Lahoul with its green pastures and groves of birch trees a very Goshen. The western route is from the Chumba frontier up the valley of the Chenab. Though the mean level of the valley is little less than 10,000 feet, the people of Lahoul are agricultural. They grow good crops of wheat, barley, and buckwheat on the terraced fields which they reclaim from the mountain sides, but all other necessities of life they import from Kullu in exchange for wood and borax. Both houses and fields are ranged in tiers along the rocky ledges of deep ravines. The result is that the missionaries when they preach, must assemble their audience on the roofs of the adjacent houses, for there is no other level space in the village. The first occasion on which the people heard the glad news in their own tongue was a memorable time, and not a man, woman, or child was absent from the roof tops, save the Lamas, whose hour of worship it was, and whom the villagers at once abandoned, since it is not necessary that they should either hear or understand the Lamas' words under a creed which justifies praying by wind and water wheels. The Lamas can predict an eclipse with some accuracy, but with the people they have the same ideas as to its cause as the Hindoos. At first the Lamas assisted the missionaries, believing they were anxious to learn their language and faith for its own sake, but now they are the chief obstacle to the conversion of the people. Mr. Pagell's tutor was greatly chagrined when he discovered his pupil's object to be the spread of Christianity, but his monthly salary was too strong for his consistency, and he contented himself with fortifying the Thibetan servants in their own creed. The spiritual pride of the Lamas and their ideas of the way to get salvation are in keeping. On one occasion after listening to Mr. Pagell while preaching on the Sermon on the Mount, a Lama put into his hand a piece of paper, on which it was written,—“You wish to show others the way and do not know it yourself. Cease from such useless words.” Shortly afterwards, on meeting Mr. Pagell alone, he said with an air of condescending benignity, “Practise virtue and forsake sin.” The sort of virtue which they practise in order, as they hope, to insure their transition into a better form of existence in another world, is curiously illustrated in one of the monasteries at Kanam in Spiti, where there is a large library, containing three hundred volumes of some five hundred large leaves each. A Lama lives there, who has imposed on himself the task of reading the whole of these volumes through, in order to obtain salvation. When Mr. Heide saw him he had been thus engaged for four years, and there were still some eighty thick volumes left unread.

The first step of the Moravians was to dismiss all their Hindoo work-people, and to replace them by Thibetans, though much to their own immediate disadvantage, as the latter were wholly unaccustomed to servants' duties. They felt, however, that the presence of the Hindoos had an injurious effect upon the people round them, who, with all their faults, are free from duplicity, and remarkably open and straightforward. At the same time they found it requisite to have some sort of printing press at hand to enable them to print books in Thibetan. Mr. Pagell accordingly took a journey to Simla in 1858 to purchase a lithographic press, and to learn the art of printing. In January, 1859, he printed with this a translation of Barth's Bible stories which Mr. Jaeschke had made, and this has been followed since by a Primer illustrated with delineations of familiar local objects, also by a translation of the Acts of the Apostles, with a sketch map, and an almanac. In the winter of 1860-61, with the aid of these elementary books, Mr. Heide commenced a boys' school. This has been a work requiring much faith and patience. Learning of any kind is something so completely new to them that they have naturally no aptitude or liking for it, and the progress made has been consequently very slow. In addition to these disadvantages, the school has to be closed altogether during the summer months when the boys are engaged in cultivating the fields. The attendance has never ranged higher than fifteen, and in April dwindled down to three. Another difficulty has arisen from the fact of the dialect which they speak being unwritten and different from the written Thibetan. With this school is combined an industrial department, in which ten boys and twenty-two girls have been this last year employed in weaving coarse cloth, making pasteboard, and knitting stockings—the two former articles for their own use, and the latter for sale to European visitors.

Great is the spiritual courage of these Moravian brethren, and, like Livingstone, their labours are valuable in the spread of civilisation and literature. The first Thibetan dictionary by Schröder was edited by Dr. Marshman, and published by the Serampore Press in 1820. The story of Csoma de Koros, the Hungarian, who lived for many years on the Thibetan frontier, and published a Thibetan and English dictionary at Calcutta in 1834, is well known. But previous to the establishment of the lithographic press at Kyelang, one of the works issued by which is now before us, the only other books in the Mongolian language were printed at St. Petersburg. May the light which so brightly burns in this little watch-tower of truth amid the snows of the Himalayas, soon lighten the darkness of Central Asia!—Friend of India.

EUROPEAN VAGRANTS IN INDIA.

Bombay has taken a sudden start in the exercise of the inventive faculties. A short time ago they were all for turning dead Hindoos into gas, and now Sir W. Mansfield and others have a notion of turning European vagrants into smoke. In both cases consumption is the object aimed at. The dead Hindoos are to be consumed by the process of turning them into gas, and the live vagrants consumed in the form of smoke.

Sir W. Mansfield and the other geniuses of Duckland would confer a great favour on society in the N. W. P. if they would impart the latter discovery to us, or confide it to the traffic managers and head engineers of the railways. The whole country in these parts is fast becoming inundated with European vagrants; they all come straight from the Railway, and frequently make their appearance begging, in every stage of incipient intoxication; occasionally with swollen features, and much blackness and discolouration about the eyes. English beggars in this country carry on work in true oriental state and luxury, generally announcing their arrival with a "salam," as if an old and intimate friend had just arrived from England, and was waiting without to be embraced; at other times they send in their card or names written on a piece of paper. Invariably it is the same story—"the railway"—"discharged from the railway." What ultimately becomes of these people we can only form a guess. We suspect they live precarious lives preying on the natives: wandering about the country and exacting the means of livelihood by violence or intimidation from village to village. Some few may be lucky enough to enter the service of native chiefs where they have a good opening before them of rising to be Prime Ministers or commanders-in-chief.

The Government and its half-brother by guarantee, the railway, who profess to be so very solicitous about the welfare of the natives, and who, in looking after the interests of their black subjects and constituents, are apt to overlook the rights of their white, are remarkably hard-hearted in the matter. They allow—nay, the railway sends—these adventurers, beggars, interlopers, whom Sir W. Mansfield regards only as so much fuel for smoke, to victimize the mild Gentoos ad libitum, to eke out their living as they may, wandering over the country in the guise of "Sahibs," a title they are too modest not to claim. Some, no doubt, fall victims to the climate and disease, and perish miserably on the roads or in serais—but whatever they do, we may be sure of this—they do no good, and Sir W. Mansfield would be doing us and them a good turn, if he would show us how to metamorphose them into smoke.

Advocates as we are for liberty and all that, we must say in this respect some little interference with the right of Britons to go where they please (when not in jail) would be excusable,—nay, is advisable. The railway, instead of discharging their surplus employes and men whom they are forced to discharge, should be called to return them whence they came. The men are better off, and less likely to do mischief, either to themselves or others, in seaport towns, where, as a last resort, they can, at any rate, obtain service on board ship. It is not fair to the vagrants, or to the natives, to allow the former such freedom of access to the country. For the most part, utterly unprincipled, with no character to maintain, ready for violence at any time, the European vagrant becomes an intolerable nuisance in a country like India. The natives are afraid of him; and he either lives by a species of modified highway robbery, or kills himself with country spirits.

It is not long ago, we know, that all interlopers were classified under the same category as these vagrants. And it is not unlikely that sufficient of the old leaven still remains in the Government for them to urge that a measure to "deport vagrants" would involve the deportation of every Englishman not in Government employ,—in which case we might find ourselves unhappy candidates for (certainly not able) seaman's wages before the mast—or worse still, rapidly dissolving into smoke under the process known at Bombay. We, therefore, enter a timely protest, and suggest that every man should be considered a "vagrant" who has no ostensible means of living, or no certificate from his last employers, stating that he is able to earn a respectable livelihood in the pursuit of some definite trade. All others should be stopped and sent to the nearest railway station to go "back" by the next train. The railway have no right to complain of our giving them their own again—and if any doubt arises as to the meaning of the word "back," we should interpret it by "where they came from."

The Railway Company should also be required to keep a register at their head offices of every foreigner they engage, his descriptive roll, &c., &c., and such particulars as would enable him to be recognised, and when discharged the event should be reported and the entry made, with a view to having some clue on record for tracing his future fate. Many of these men doubtless take service with the railway just with the view of saving a little money and getting up country, so as to be able to start on a voyage of adventurous vagrancy through the land, trusting to their own want of principle, to violence, or cunning to get an easy livelihood out of the timid natives or isolated Englishmen scattered about in small Mofussil stations. To the uneducated lower classes of Great Britain, India is still the El Dorado, the country where jewels and precious stones are indigenous. It is not long ago the wife of one of the troopers of a cavalry regiment just out from home, who had gone into service, complained to her mistress that she had been dreadfully deceived about India. She was led to believe that coming out to this country she would as the wife of a private, drive about in a carriage and four and pick up gold in the street. Doubtless the vagrants we have been writing of, animated by some vague ideas of finding a livelihood without the trouble of working for it, by wandering about the country, and being disappointed at not picking up even coppers on the roads, are likely enough to help themselves to the private property of "blackies" whenever they can do so in out of the way places and villages—and no record or no account being taken of them it is more than likely that sooner or later they fall victims to their own cupidity or violence.

Whatever becomes of them, these men are a great nuisance even to English residents in large stations. They must be worse than locusts among the natives and away from all fear of European surveillance, and the Government are bound to take some steps to put a stop to the present practice.—Delhi Gazette, March 7.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.

Previously to the year 1795 the medical service of India was composed for the most part of adventurers, who went out to India as surgeons of ships, &c., and who probably, not having any diploma, or legal qualification to practise their profession, were admitted on the Company's army list, by virtue of passing an examination before the medical boards of the three presidencies. About this time, however, the Hon. Court of Directors placed the service on a more respectable footing, and previously to the admission of any gentleman required him to show a diploma from one of the colleges of London, Edinburgh, or Dublin. At the same period, with a liberality which has never been approached since, the local Government, with the consent of the Leadenhall magnates, gave to regimental surgeons contracts for purveying hospital stores, and the supplying of European and bazaar medicines. In consequence of this, medical officers found themselves in the receipt of good allowances, and the intelligence was not slow in reaching England. The service was therefore soon filled with accomplished surgeons, as Wade, Balfour, MacLean, Fleming, and others long since dead.

The feeling which, at the time referred to, originated a desire to treat the Indian medical service with liberality, probably owed its existence to the patriotism of two surgeons, Broughton and Hamilton. The professional skill of the former, successfully exerted upon the daughter of Shah Jehan, procured the long desired privilege of establishing factories in Bengal free of taxation; and when this privilege was on the point of expiring, it was renewed by the success of the latter upon the person of the Emperor Harukshere. The professional success of these two men, and their abnegation of self-interest, in asking advantages for their employers rather than themselves as the reward of their services, combined to render the medical staff popular with those who were then masters in Leadenhall-street. Hence the indirect origin of the contracts above referred to. It will not be denied, that during the time the contract system continued, a great opportunity of speculation was in the power of the surgeons. That there were some, sufficiently unprincipled, to take advantage of their position is also unfortunately the fact. Instead of being contented with those moderate gains which it was intended that the contract system should allow, medical officers were occasionally found sufficiently lost to all sense of right and wrong as scarcely to allow their charge those essentials which were requisite. From some such reasons as these the contract system in 1815 ceased, and an allowance was granted in lieu thereof; the Government undertaking to find medicine and stores. In 1828, without any such censurable cause, considerable modifications of the service and its emoluments were introduced, by which a blow was given to the prospects of all its members; although some favourable changes were made in 1830, the junior members of the service were left on a rate of pay barely sufficient to meet their expenses.

We shall now proceed to give a short sketch of a medical officer's career. The description will apply to most men who have entered the service within the last thirty or forty years, and we can but express our wonder that the failure of applicants did not result long since. The large fortunes acquired by some few individuals during the halcyon days of the "contract system" invested the service with a false halo, and until a very short time ago the idea still lingered in the minds of many that the East was the land for the surgeon to realise a rapid fortune. An assistant-surgeon, having received his nomination from a director of the old Company, had to pay his passage out to India; to purchase his uniform and outfit, and did not receive, as the civil servant, any allowance or pay before reaching India. These expenses, with those attendant on a commonly extensive medical education, could not be well defrayed for a less sum than £1,000. Arrived at the Presidency, he formerly ranked and was paid as a Lieutenant, with thirty rupees extra for palanquin allowance, and twelve or thirteen rupees in addition, for every hundred natives, or Europeans, placed under his charge. After two, three, or four years, he attained the charge of a native regiment, which increased his pay to that of a captain of infantry, while employed on active duty; but when without a charge, he could only draw the allowances of a lieutenant. If lucky enough to get a civil surgeoncy, he received from four to five hundred rupees a month, with, perhaps, fifty rupees extra for the performance of some other duty. What we have stated may be considered the average emoluments of an assistant-surgeon for his first fifteen years in India, although some few on special duties may possibly have received more. We doubt, however, if the assistant-surgeons of the present century, taking into consideration their small pay while on leave, on furlough, or out of employment, received on the average Rupees 300 per mensem until their promotion to full surgeon, which grade required about sixteen years service to obtain.

The Marquis of Dalhousie, in his memorable minute on the Service, in 1855, showed himself well aware of the slowness of promotion, and the other causes which had combined to render the service unpopular. Anxious to improve its condition that nobleman (with the concurrence of the Commander-in-Chief) recommended that an Assistant Surgeon after seven years service, instead of drawing the charge allowance for a regiment, of Rupees 165 per mensem, should be allowed that of a full surgeon, namely Rupees 300; but the Court considered it would be sufficient to allow the increase after ten years' service; and so the matter now stands. Having after fifteen years' service been gazetted as surgeon, the medical officer ranked as a captain and received a corresponding increase of pay, amounting altogether to £190 if at home on furlough, instead of £110; to Rs. 395 per mensem if unemployed in India, instead of Rs. 225; and if in charge of a native regiment, to Rs. 695 instead of Rs. 390; thirty rupees extra being drawn each month if at a full-batta station. Some few appointments, such as medical storekeeper-ships, &c., were rather better paid, but the average of receipts of all surgeons would not exceed Rs. 650 per mensem. On this rate of emolument the surgeon remained, until, after thirty years' service, if he retained his health, he was promoted to a superintending surgeoncy. Few men, however, realize the hope of living thirty years in an uncongenial climate, or, if they live so long, of retaining their energies. Yet the attainment of this grade with its Rs. 1,200 per mensem afforded almost the only prospect of saving. One in twenty of those entering the service were supposed to reach this rank, and about one in fifty the higher posts of members of the former medical boards.

Nothing, however, has yet been said about sick leave or furlough. The officer throughout his career has been supposed to enjoy good health. Few men, however, are thus blessed in a country where there are so many climates and so much duty inimical to the human constitution. Most men in the tropics suffer from severe illness at one time or other, and are compelled to proceed to the hills or Europe. There they are not only deprived of their higher allowances, but have many extra expenses to incur. The charge resigned into the hands of some expectant junior, the sick man wends his way to the presidency, whence, if he continue sick, he is allowed a furlough to Europe for eighteen months or longer, as the case may be. On the old furlough regulations he would draw while in England, including his charitable allowance from Lord Clive's fund, £128 per annum, less income tax, if an Assistant Surgeon; and £190 if a Surgeon. During the whole of his period of service his monthly pay is cut so many rupees for the funds, averaging Rs. 40 each month.

Hitherto the medical man has been considered by us only as a bachelor. If he chance to marry and have a family, his expenses must be materially increased. There are extra donations and subscriptions to the different funds, while the expense of moving about is more than doubled. The wife requires, sooner or later, to visit England for her health, and children must be sent at an early age to Europe. Thus, in many instances, the officer has had to support a family at home, and himself in the East, which can scarcely be done on the rates of pay allowed.

An idea, very prevalent and very erroneous, which, however, has operated fatally against the interests of the medical service, is, that the surgeon or physician in India makes a considerable sum, over and above his pay, by private practice. This, indeed, was held out to candidates as an inducement to come to India, till the dying day of the court of directors. Many a medical officer has recollected, with asperity, the period of his being "sworn in," when he was informed by the hon. chairman that, besides the advantage of belonging to the service, he would have the opportunity of increasing his emoluments, by private practice, amongst the natives. The great majority, however, of medical men make nothing by the exercise of their professional skill among the natives. The latter are willing, in all parts of India, to accept the services of any passing medical officer; but they as frequently ask him for further favours as well as professional aid, as attempt to offer aught for services rendered, even when well to do. Private practice, indeed, with the attendant anxiety and expense, is only obtained by those having permanent appointments in the presidency towns. On this point Sir Ranald Martin, in his evidence before the select committee appointed to inquire into the Indian army medical department, July 3, 1856, was examined as follows:—

Q. (By Sir J. Trollope, one of the committee.) Have you not the further advantage of being allowed private practice?

A. That can happen to few men. Holding a staff appointment in Calcutta, I was in private practice.

Q. Was not this a very lucrative practice?

A. It was; but the Government pay did not pay for my horses!

It is now some twenty years since Sir Ranald Martin was in Calcutta, and since that period numbers of qualified medical men, both European and natives, are now pursuing the profession of medicine in all our Eastern Presidency towns. Bombay now numbers about fifty-three medical men, twenty-three in the service of government, six or seven private European practitioners, and twenty-three legally educated natives. A sufficient number certainly to demand a large expanse of ground, if, as a well known satirist stated, "every medical man should have his own churchyard."—Times of India, March 2.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. T. WELDON.—We understand that Mr. T. Weldon, at present employed in the Bengal Police in the disturbed districts on the South-East Frontier, is to be appointed Deputy Commissioner of Police, in succession to Mr. J. B. Roberts, recently elevated to the Magisterial bench. Mr. Weldon is an active and energetic officer, and his claims to the important Metropolitan Police appointment mentioned above are founded upon excellent service in the field rendered to Government during the mutiny, when he was attached to a Naval Brigade, and since, during his police employ in the disturbed eastern districts.

INCOME-TAX.—We hear that it is not the intention of the Government of India to press the demand for income-tax against British subjects in foreign territory not employed in the service of her Majesty. Only the servants of the British Crown are to be considered as public servants within the meaning of the Act. All the members of the last class are taxable without reference to the question whether or not the funds for the payment of their salaries are provided by a native State. This ruling cancels all previous orders on the subject, but arrears of the tax will not be demanded from those officers who, under any of the orders now superseded, may hitherto have been exempted from the operation of the law.

THE REBEL JYNTAHS.—We are happy to find that we were rather out in the return of the results of the engagement between our troops and the rebel Jyntaahs, as given in our last Weekly Mail, the number of prisoners taken being forty-five, instead of five. We are also glad to say that further accounts represent the rebels as getting tired of the contest, and willing to come in from all directions; and there seems at last reason to believe that, if the military operations are pressed on our side with vigour, and our occupation of the country is maintained with the full force now in the field, the Jyntaahs and Cossyabs will all give in before the season when military operations must cease shall have arrived, and will not, as heretofore, break out in fresh rebellion upon the setting-in of the rains. We have heard that there is some intention of letting the 28th Punjab N.I., ordered to Meerut in the relief, leave the Jynteah country for its destination in the North-west Provinces; but unless this regiment is to be replaced by another we hope that it will remain where it is, and that the Jynteah field-force will not be diminished by a single soldier till next cold season; when, should permanent tranquillity have been maintained throughout the year, a large relief of the troops can perhaps be effected with safety. Of the prisoners above mentioned as having been captured it is probable that the more important captives will be sentenced to transportation, and the remainder to penal labour in the Cherra Jail, where they will serve as a warning example to their fellow-rebels.

MILITARY AND ORPHAN FUND.—In continuation of our late remarks regarding the proposed transfer to the Crown of the Military and Orphan Funds, we would call attention to one point connected with the measure, in which we certainly trust that either by firm respectful remonstrance to the Government in this country for submission to the authorities at home, or by measures of a more decided character, the probable intention of Sir Charles Wood may be frustrated. We allude to the unemployed officers of the late company's armies, whose position is a peculiarly hard one, and their continued liability to a compulsory subscription to these funds most unjust. A regimental officer, drawing his company or troop allowance, may cheerfully contribute to funds which relieve the widows and orphans of his brother officers, and, though the payment of donations, penal interest, &c., may occasionally be felt as a hardship, he continues to subscribe without much grumbling, because he can manage to keep out of debt. The unemployed officers, however, without command allowance, with no prospects, half batta, an oppressive income-tax, no regimental prospects, blunted careers, disappointed hopes, and the withering conviction that the iron heel of injustice is crushing them out of existence, are in a very different position. We believe that almost all these ill-used men would cease to belong to the fund if they were not compelled to subscribe, and, therefore, when the transfer is made their case should receive due consideration; especially as in this instance the authorities will be acting justly to their servants, and in accordance with their own interests. We would suggest, therefore, that subscriptions in the case of unemployed officers should no longer be compulsory, but that on their obtaining an appointment, and wishing to rejoin the fund, they should be permitted to do so on payment of additional subscriptions, penal interest, &c.—Englishman, Feb. 28.

WHO HAS THE BEST RIGHT TO THE KIDNIES.—Until the colonel returned from leave it was customary that the Mess President, Major (who manages so well that he has become, by general suffrage as it were, Perpetual Caterer), should have the two kidneys of the slaughtered sheep boiled for his tiffin. Nobody objected to this, and so long and unchallenged had the practice continued, that at the mess a kidney was known as the major's commission. Unfortunately, the colonel likes kidneys as well, and after one or two tiffins on his return had passed over quietly, he kicked up a rumpus about the major appropriating the kidneys to himself, and formally gave it as his opinion at table that the commanding officer had a better right to them. The major opposed the pretension, and one debate has brought another, the discussion being no longer confined to the commandant and mess President, but shared in by all the officers of the corps, and in no small measure by the other messes and residents of the station, with all of whom a grand subject of after dinner, band stand, and evening drive debate, is "Who has the best right to the kidneys?" The matter, you may be sure, has not proceeded thus far without the cognizance of superior authority. The question was referred to the major general, but he declined to decide, giving it as his opinion that, as it was a matter of perquisites, it should be referred to the Commissary General. This the colonel declines to do, saying "the major may if he likes, but I'll have nothing to say to a department that treated Priestley so shamefully." Nor is the major more likely to trouble the Commissariat. "They might take it as a personal insult," he has been heard to say, "as a kind of insinuation that they appropriate the kidneys the soldiers should get—which would be all the worse for being true, for during the forty years I've been in the service I never yet saw a kidney in ration meat!" Meanwhile, in order to prevent unpleasantness, the slaughter of mess mutton has ceased, and a station order has appeared, directing the commissariat officer to issue daily rations of beef and salt meat to the officers of H.M.'s—th, at the rate of a pound each per diem, until further orders, sending in a bill monthly to the paymaster of the corps for adjustment. Here the matter stands at present, but there is nothing more certain than that you will hear more about it, and that before long. Indeed, I shall not be surprised if, before long, what with reference to the Commander-in-chief, the Government of India, the Horse Guards, and, mayhap, ultimately, the House of Commons, the great question of "who has the best right to the kidneys?" becomes one of such universal interest as to completely throw Priestley Fitzgerald, Sir Hugh Rose, and the Viceroy into the shade. You shall hear the denouement.—Delhi Gazette.

MILITARY FINANCE DEPARTMENT.—We believe it is arranged that, on the dissolution of the Military Finance Department and office establishment, the latter will, for the most part, be dispersed as follows:—"One portion will go to the office of the Accountant-General to the Government of India; another to the office of the Military Accountant to the Government; and the remainder to the office of the Military Secretary to Government. In this way, we suppose that none of what is strictly called the office establishment will be thrown out of employ; but we have not heard what is to be done with the military officers now employed in the Military Finance Department on very high salaries, and a chief part of whose business it has been to make others work on very low salaries. If these officers go with their men, as the saying is, and retain their present rates of pay and allowances, it is not very easy to understand where the important saving to the public will be effected by the abolition of the Military Finance Department; but as these are the days of forming and reforming, changing, constructing, and abolishing, we suppose that we must be content to wait, and 'see what we shall see' in this matter."—Englishman.

THE PUNJAB.—A most valuable report, with maps and an important minute by Sir Robert Montgomery, on the trade of the Punjab and its frontiers, has just been completed by Mr. Davies, the able Secretary of the Punjab Government. We shall hereafter notice it at length. As a mere book of reference it will be found most useful to the mercantile community in England and India. Every effort is being made to open the communications more freely. Steamers are now running to Mukhud, about a hundred miles from Attock; and a tow line is being completed which will enable boats, during nine months of the year, to be towed up to Attock and on, up the Cabul River, to within ten miles of Peshawur. A road for carriages is also being made through a most difficult country from Mukhud to Attock, so that between England and Peshawur there will be water carriage for nine months in the year. Above Mukhud there are rapids which the steamers cannot pass. A reduction of duties on the Cashmere frontier is being arranged, and then there will be a straight road with light duties from Jhylum to Cashmere, Ladak, and right into China at Yarkund. On the East, again, a communication is being opened into China through Shipkee. Lord Dalhousie's road was only partially made, and was little used except by tourists. It went winding so much, to secure an easy gradient, that native travellers and merchants abandoned it. It was also very costly, and had no terminus, while it left out important trade towns. The plan now being followed is to improve the native tracks where this can be done sufficiently to enable a loaded mule to go along, and here and there to take a new line. In a year there will be improved native tracks from Simla to Yarkund and from Simla to Shipkee, both Chinese towns, with considerable trade.—Friend of India.

CANTON.—FRENCH ECCLESIASTICAL OUTRAGE.—The following is the version current in Canton relative to the last Gallic ecclesiastical difficulty. The subject is highly important, and must be carefully watched:—"About a year ago three men, in the guise of French priests, were preaching the religion of the Lord of Heaven in the province of Kwei-chau, and as their presence and their preaching created disturbances and suspicions to the disquiet of the popular mind, and were therefore distasteful to the Provincial Government, they were requested by the authorities to leave that part of the country; they appealed to the Governor of the Province, and asserted their Treaty-right to live and preach in Kwei-chau as well as in any other part of China. On examination, however, two of the party proved to be Chinese, and the third was suspected to be a seditious character, but as there was no proof of crime against any of them, they were simply forbidden to stay there longer. Shortly afterwards three bona fide French priests travelled into the same region, and the Governor, presuming that they were the same identical three he had already dismissed, ordered their seizure, and after a severe warning sent them on their way to Canton. Arrived there, and having reported their case to the French Consul, a despatch was procured from Governor General Laou, of the Two Kwang, assuring the Governor of Kwei-chau that the three individuals were but peaceful missionaries, entitled by treaty to propagate their creed throughout China. This despatch was forwarded by an ordinary messenger, and, relying on its efficacy, the three missionaries started on their return journey to Kwei-chau; but it so happened that the three missionaries reached their destination before the despatch; thereupon the Governor of Kwei-chau, knowing of nothing that had taken place since his last dismissal of them, again ordered their seizure, in effecting which one of the three was killed; the other two were, after some confinement, returned to Canton. The matter was then reported to Peking, and the result was that Prince Kung directed the Governor of Kwei-chau to be deprived of his rank and position, for having caused the death of the subject of a friendly nation. The Governor, however, resented this treatment, argued that his conduct had been right throughout, and absolutely refused to head the Imperial edict directing his degradation, and finally in effect threatened that sooner than he would submit to the oppression he would cause the province under his control to 'secede.' His protest caused alarm to the Peking Court, and with a view to settling the matter to the satisfaction of all parties, Governor-general Laou is now directed by the Court to proceed to Kwei-chau, and to endeavour to pacify the rebellious Governor of that province (who is an old friend of his), and to induce him to select some one to bear the blame and to submit to the degradation required for the satisfaction of the French demand."—Daily Press.

THE YOUNG RAJAH OF CHIRKAREE.—A correspondent of the Oudh Gazette describes the meeting at Cawnpore between the Viceroy and the youthful Rajah of Chirkaree as being a very affecting scene. The Rajah is a child of about seven or eight years of age, and on his being presented to Lord Elgin, the little fellow put up his hands, and implored his lordship's continued protection, adding that he had no father or mother now to look to, but the Viceroy and the British Government. Lord Elgin patted the orphan chief on the shoulders, and assured him, in the frankest and most feeling manner, that he should have all the protection that it was in his power to extend. It will be remembered that the late Rajah of Chirkaree, this boy's father, was the chief who saved the life of Mr. Cairn, declaring to the mutineers who demanded the Englishman's surrender, that sooner than they should get him they should have his only son. The present youthful Rajah is that son; and it may readily be supposed that the Viceroy's promise of protection is not mere empty words.

LOCUSTS.—We regret to learn that locusts, whose erratic course has been chronicled from time to time from various quarters, commencing in Sind and following the Indus northward, and turning eastward from the Sing Sagur Doab, have reached the fertile lands of the Rechna and Barea Doabs, and done considerable damage. The neighbourhood of Kusoor, Turun Tarun, &c., is said to have been very injuriously affected by these destructive insects, and they had almost entire possession of the line of the Grand Trunk Roads between Umritsur and the Beas on Monday last. One traveller observed them in clouds for seven miles on this line. At Umritsur immense flights passed over during the afternoon, and many settled in the fields and gardens about, but were speedily driven off by the shouts and drumming of the owners, who gathered in crowds to assist them in disturbing their unwelcome visitor.—Delhi Gazette, March 7.

INDIAN CASH BALANCES.—In continuation of notification dated the 13th January, the following statement of cash balances, as reported up to the 27th February in the Government Treasuries in India, at the close of the month of December last, contrasted with that of the previous years, is published for general information:—

RUNNING A MUCK: A TRAGIC OCCURRENCE.

A very shocking outrage has recently been enacted in the Court of the Assistant Commissioner of Raepore, in the province of Nagpore. A disappointed suitor, a man of the Brinjaree caste, run a muck, and after unsuccessfully attempting to stab Lieut. Faber he stabbed the Misl Khwan, or Sheristedar (whom he accused of having received a heavy bribe), a policeman, and another person who came to the court with a petition. He then stabbed himself, and was ultimately shot down and killed. The Misl Khwan and the petitioner whom he stabbed are both reported to be mortally wounded. We give below the letter of our Nagpore correspondent, containing the particulars of this outrage:—"Nagpore, 3rd March, 1863.—On the 25th ult., a horribly tragical occurrence took place at Raepore, the particulars of which are as follows:—At ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, a powerfully made man of the Brinjaree caste presented a petition to Lieut. Faber, the Assistant-Commissioner, who directed him to file his plaint in court at 4 P.M. At the hour named, the man returned, and presented his plaint, in which he preferred a charge of assault, by which he stated he had sustained loss of character, and felt himself seriously aggrieved. Lieut. Faber gave an order that the case should be investigated by the Tehseeldar of Droog, and returned his petition to the complainant; but the latter earnestly begged that the case might be tried by Lieut. Faber himself, who, however, refused to do so, when the man declined to receive back his petition. On this the Misl Khwan, or vernacular reader, directed the complainant to leave the court. Finding that entreaties were of no avail, the man left the court, but soon afterwards returned; and notwithstanding the presence of numerous policemen, peons and others, he managed, without being noticed, to walk close up to the Misl Khwan, whom he deliberately stabbed twice with a dagger which he had concealed about his person. After this he made an attempt to stab Lieut. Faber, but in doing so fortunately missed his aim and fell. He, however, soon recovered himself, and, jumping up, flourished his dagger in a most frantic manner. The crowd of persons at the time assembled in the court-house cleared out as quickly as they could, but before they could get away he stabbed one of them, who, like himself, came there with a petition. Lieut. Faber and Messrs. Wrottesley and De Lang followed him, calling out to the crowd to disarm him; but all to no purpose, as every one was panic-stricken at the furious conduct of the assassin. A Madras sepoy charged him with his bayonet, but the Brinjaree warded it off with his dagger and felled the sepoy to the earth. One of the policemen hereupon struck him a blow on the head with the stick, when the fellow, after ripping open the side of another policeman who happened to come in his way, stabbed himself twice in the stomach. At this juncture orders were issued to shoot him down, and a bullet was sent through his body, which wounded the spine; this placed him completely hors de combat, and, upon Lieut. Faber asking him what had induced him to act in the manner he had done, he replied that the Misl Khwan had received a bribe of two thousand rupees from the opposite party to prevent justice being meted out to him. This is all that could be elicited from him, as he was then in a sinking state, and died within an hour of his receiving the fatal wound. The policeman whose side was ripped open, is considered to be out of danger; but the Misl Khwan, and the other man whom he stabbed, are mortally wounded, and dying, if, indeed, they be not already dead. This tragedy could not have been enacted but for the vicious system which obtains in our district courts, of permitting them to be thronged all day with a crowd of people, many of whom have no business there. This affords facilities for any man with sinister intentions accomplishing his evil purpose without being prevented. Mr. Strachey, our Judicial Commissioner, should see to this, and issue a circular on the subject, as he is himself very careful never to allow a crowd to collect in his court. It is to be hoped that all our district officers will take warning from the narrow escape which Lieut. Faber has just had from the dagger of an assassin. The crowded state of our court rooms is very objectionable in every way, and the district officer is not accessible unless one elbows one's way through a crowd of dirty suitors. The nazir and his peons in these provinces do not yet understand their duty, and the sooner a move is made in the right direction the better it will be for the safety of the district officers and the dignity of the various tribunals." The trial of the parties charged with assault and rioting at Khandalla on the 15th January last, on which occasion four European gentlemen were violently beaten by a mob of villagers and policemen, owing to one of them having interfered with the police in the execution of their duty, has resulted in the acquittal of nine of the prisoners and conviction of seven—six policemen and a villager—which latter have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, extending from two to six months. A report of the magistrate's decision, which appears to have given general satisfaction, will be found in another column.—Times of India.

THE SMALES-CRAWLEY AFFAIR.—The tenor of the Duke of Cambridge's memorandum on the Smales-Crawley business is, we are assured, that in some way or other every one concerned in the dispute has been to blame, and that the most sensible thing that can be done is to say no more about the matter, and let all take warning by the past to keep a more careful watch over their tempers and reputations. Mr. Smales having been cashiered, remains as he is, but will, probably, be quietly compensated to some extent for what he has lost. Colonel Crawley is rebuked for his intemperate language, and told that, if he were not such a good soldier, he would not escape without heavy punishment. Major Swindley is cautioned not to do it again, his past misconduct being excused on the score of his many years good service. There is, of course, nothing about Sir Hugh Rose in the memorandum read out to the Inniskillings; and we have never believed that either this or the Priestley affair, or any such matter of petty gossip, would compel Sir Hugh to resign the command-in-chief of the Indian army.—Bombay Saturday Review.

NEW INDIGO COMPANY AT MOOLTAN.—The Financial Commissioner of the Punjab, Mr. D. F. McLeod, has just paid us a flying visit, en route to the Derajat; his stay in Mooltan was far too short to admit of his working the inquiry anent the new Indigo Company, suggested by his Honour the Lieutenant-governor, but from what I can learn, the manager of the Company, Mr. Cosserat, had an interview with Mr. McLeod at Khanpur. Whilst passing through the Shoojabad Tehseel last week, I was struck with the amount of energy displayed in trying to give the new factory something like an appearance, or in other words, in striving to establish it; a splendid site, favourably situated, in the midst of flourishing fields of indigo, has already been appropriated and cleared, kilns formed, bricks in course of manufacture, reservoirs and vats being excavated, all denoting exertion with the view of manufacturing indigo on the Bengal plan this season. I have been credibly informed that the Company is prepared to expend half of a lakh of Rupees on the undertaking this year; what marvel, therefore, if the local Government proffers all the aid in its power, especially when it is considered the extent to which the district will be benefited by the operations of the "Punjab Indigo Company;" also, that the Government withheld a grant in aid of only 10,000 Rupees when applied for by Mr. Kenneth Melver, of Mooltan, for opening out the resources of the place in a similar manner.—Lahore Chronicle.

BOURNE'S STEAMERS have been reaping quite a harvest latterly, having bagged something like Rs. 25,000 per trip down, of course laden with cotton. I see the Government offers Tuccavee advances for the building of boats in order to provide tonnage for the accumulation of cotton now at the Bunder, but long before planks can be sawn up for the construction of said boats, Bourne's steamers will have cleared the beach.

THE MEMORIAL GARDEN AT CAWNPORE.—The Hon. the Lieut.-governor of the North Western Provinces has issued the following rules for the future care and maintenance of the garden containing the remains of those who were massacred at Cawnpore in July 1857:—1st. It shall be known as the "Memorial Garden." 2nd. Its management shall be entrusted to a committee. 3rd. An European custodian will be placed in charge of it at the cost of the state. 4th. It is to be open to the public on such conditions as the committee may determine upon, the Lieut.-governor feeling satisfied that all frequenting it will bear in mind the character of the place and events with which it is connected, and abstain from acts of an unbecoming nature. 5th. Riding and driving at a furious pace, also parties of pleasure, will be prohibited within the enclosure. 6th. Admission to the well surmounted by a memorial, and the two burial grounds consecrated by the bishop, can take place only under special permission obtained from a member of the managing committee. 7th. The committee are empowered to frame subsidiary rules as a majority of their number may deem necessary.

THE TERMINUS OF THE RAILWAYS AT DELHI.—As a signer of the petition from Delhi so disinterestedly commented upon by the Hills, and other N. W. P. journals, and as a testimonial to you, Mr. Editor, for the remarks you were good enough to make thereupon, I announce our triumph to the effect that the terminus of both E. I. Rail and Punjab Rail are to be in the centre of the city of Delhi. This will at once double the value of household and landed property, and the great commercial future of Delhi is now beyond a doubt. The Viceroy, in the presence of the Lieut.-Governor and his Staff, Colonel Strachy, the General Commanding and his Staff, and of the Chief Engineers of the combatant railways, dealt with the whole question in a manner that evinced considerable breadth of view, combined with the minute knowledge of all the varied details of the intricate question before him. He dealt with the subject of the line entering Delhi, under separate heads in a military, financial, commercial, and a political point of view. The military were no where in the discussion, or rather, I should say, in the masterly exposition of the whole question by the Viceroy. For his Excellency administered the most complete saucer to all objections on each branch of the subject; and concluded by inquiring whether anybody had anything further to urge, for this was the last time of asking, and no mortal would ever listen to the subject again. Sir Robert Montgomery and the petitioners must have been pleased at so satisfactory a result of a great question which, as Lord Elgin remarked before every body, was entirely raised by Colonel Strachy, though he admitted with great ability.—Delhi Gazette, March 7.

SIR CHARLES JACKSON.—On the 23rd February Sir Charles Jackson left India after a sojourn of fourteen years amongst us. He came out originally as Advocate General of Bengal, and was transferred to the Bombay Bench; but in 1855 he returned to Calcutta, and had since, as one of the Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court, made himself conspicuous by his uprightness and dignified bearing. Sir Charles Jackson subsequently became one of the members of the Legislative Council of 1858, and was mixed up with most of the party questions which agitated the public mind for three years subsequently. His praise as a political favourite of the Anglo-Indian community has been sung elsewhere. To us his value was in his unflinching conscientiousness as a judge and his genuine goodness of heart as a man. The charities of Calcutta owe him a debt of deep gratitude. Yet in the fulness of life and strength, we wish him every prosperity in his native land.—Indian Mirror, March 1.

We are sorry to learn that ill-health compels the Hon. Ashley Eden to go to England on sick leave. He leaves on the 23rd instant. We hope to see him on his return re-installed in the Bengal Secretariat. Three non-official members of the Council will also follow him soon. They are Messrs. Peterson, Bullen, and Moran.—Hindoo Patriot, March 2.

THE RAILWAY.—The Bengal section of this line being now completed throughout, Government, with a view to greater economy, has called on the representatives of the company here to submit for examination and sanction a probable estimate of the expenditure required in connection with the section for the coming year. In order to meet this requisition a meeting of railway officials, including Messrs. Campbell, Nicholls, Powers, Roberts and Denham, was held a few days ago at Howrah. The railway budget system thus initiated will be productive of very great advantage to the shareholders and to the Government of India. We rather think a wholesome check will be beneficial to the interests of the shareholders.—Phaniz.

OUDE.—Some short time past it was considered desirable to locate a native regiment at Chittagong, and the Quartermaster-general of the army applied to the Chief Commissioner of Oude for information as to whether a native regiment could be spared from Oude for that purpose. The Chief Commissioner has replied that he considers three native regiments amply sufficient for the security of Oude, and that it is immaterial to the civil authorities from what station the fourth regiment be withdrawn.

"TELL IT NOT IN GATH."—The shareholders of the Bank of Kurrahee in particular, and our readers in general, will be astonished, yea, thunderstruck, to learn that both the English and Sindee cash books were stolen yesterday morning, having been abstracted from the bank's large safe. A party who was seen on the premises at 7 A.M. is strongly suspected, as no one else could have opened the safe, or known where the books were. Steps, however, were promptly taken to bring the theft home to the offender, and it is to be hoped they will prove successful. After the above was in type, we receive still more startling intelligence, which we do not hesitate to set before the public. Affidavits were sworn to before Mr. Boulton, the deputy magistrate, yesterday afternoon, by Mr. Pestonjee Byramjee, the acting manager, and Munhore, a peon of the bank's establishment, to the following effect:—That Mr. George Plunkett, the late manager, called at the bank's premises about 7 A.M. yesterday, that he ordered the peon to unlock and open the door of the counter, and entered. He then went up stairs with the peon; left him there packing up some books and papers, Mr. Plunkett's property, and returned below. On the man bringing the parcel to him, he sent him up again. When the peon returned, he found a package made up by Mr. Plunkett, consisting apparently of books, files, and papers, which he was ordered to take to Messrs. Giles, McGill, and Co.'s Office. Mr. Plunkett followed him immediately. The parcel was put down, and the man ordered back to the Bank with another peon, to bring other papers. On the return of the men, Mr. Plunkett gave the Bank's peon the first parcel, and told him to take it back, in order to be shown to the acting manager, on his coming to office. A chit was sent to the effect that Mr. Plunkett had called in the morning in the hope of meeting the manager, and requesting him to examine the parcel in question. On the manager's coming to the bank he opened the safe to take out the books; the shroff, who had put the cash books into it the evening previous, missed them at once. Mr. Plunkett had the duplicate keys, which he had evaded making over on his ceasing his connection with the bank, though repeatedly asked for them. A search warrant was applied for, but Mr. Boulton decided on summoning Mr. Plunkett, who has accordingly been requested to attend Court to-day, no hour being named; the complainants, moreover, have not been warned to attend. We reserve all comment, and simply confine ourselves to a detail of the facts which have been given to us by shareholders and directors of the bank, on whose veracity we cannot but implicitly rely.—Our Paper (Kurrahee), March 3. [Intelligence was received in Bombay by electric telegraph, on the 10th inst., that Mr. Plunkett had committed suicide.]—Ed. B. G.

MILITARY ON DUTY.—The Institute believes it has been decided that the troops stationed at Delhi shall, in future, be relieved every year. This will be found a good arrangement, as it will, we hope, prevent the recurrence of such sickness as prevailed in the 82nd for some time previous to their departure.

THE VICEROY has decided the question of the Delhi railway in favour of the memorialists.

MADRAS.

THE LATE REV. DR. EDWARDS.—A GRAVEYARD SCANDAL.

It is with much concern and deep regret that we learned yesterday evening of the death, at Bangalore, at three o'clock on Tuesday morning last, of the Reverend J. Edwards, D.D. This gentleman is well known to the community of Madras as the late editor of this journal, in which capacity he laboured for many years. It would be almost a work of supererogation for us to say anything in respect to his abilities, talents, or qualifications as a public writer. Thoroughly disinterested and independent, he always took the highest and boldest position, doing battle for the cause of truth and justice. The public and the Roman Catholic of Madras in particular have much to be thankful to him for. He exposed injustice and jobbery with an unsparing hand, he manfully maintained the rights of the poor and oppressed, without the least particle of fear or dread of incurring the displeasure of those in power, while he was ever ready to come to the help of those in trouble and difficulties. On such occasions he threw aside all animosities and feuds, and came to the succour with a boldness and bravery rarely found among public writers. His writings, like his deeds, bore the impress of his large mind, accurate judgment, and liberal heart. Powerful, searching, logical, and eloquent, while wit and humour and clever sarcasm flashed with brilliant displays. There are few, perhaps, who can equal him for the readiness with which he mastered a subject, the clearness with which he placed the same before his readers, and the lucidity and perspicuity with which he argued it out. His logic was most powerful and overwhelming. Many is the hard knock which he gave his wincing contemporaries, and many the victory he gained in the cause of the public good. He was a true and sincere friend of the East Indians, who have lost in him a wise adviser and powerful advocate. In his private life he was most amiable. There are many in Madras who were devotedly attached to him for his many excellent qualities. As a friend he was sincere and attached, as a companion agreeable and delightful, and we doubt not there are many who will sadly miss his pleasant wit, his rich humour, his ready repartee, his pleasant courteousness, and his lively temperament. In the late Doctor Edwards his friends have lost a most valued and esteemed member of their circle, the community an ornament, and the Press a clever, honest, and independent representative.—Madras Examiner, March 6.

It was quite true the lamented gentleman had not been in religious communion with his Church for some time, still, the generally received opinion that he was excommunicated was by no means the case; he was simply suspended from the functions of a Catholic priest, and was therefore reduced (we opine we are correct) to the position of a Catholic layman, and, as such, most undoubtedly entitled to Roman Catholic burial; and we cannot but think that a grave error has been committed by the bishop at this station, in not allowing a priest to officiate at the funeral, as we believe more than one was willing to do so, had they been permitted. It is, we believe, also asserted that Dr. Edwards was an apostate besides not being in communion with his Church. We deny the first of these accusations, and we believe that, but for his awfully sudden death, he would, had he known his critical position, have sent for the religious aid of his Church. How often do we attend the funerals of those who in life paid little or no attention to the religious duties of their Church, yet who without question have received the Christian burial of their sect? We must now notice the refusal of the Protestant Chaplains of the station to perform the burial service over the deceased. We cannot agree with the Recorder, in the sweeping condemnation he inflicts, as we decidedly differ with him in thinking there were no grounds for their refusal. We are of opinion that they had a most delicate point to decide, and although we think a more liberal decision might have been arrived at, still we would in no wise condemn them, and as for making this case a parallel with that of the unfortunate sergeant of the 66th, who shot himself about a week ago, only on the verdict of the Court of Inquiry could they have buried him, and moreover they dare not have refused to do so. The Protestant burial service was, we are glad to say, read by Mr. Lacey over the remains of the lamented editor.—Bangalore Herald, March 6.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR WILLIAM DENISON'S DAUGHTER'S MARRIAGE.—Sir William Denison's eldest surviving daughter was married last week to James Wilkinson Breeks, the private secretary to his Excellency. The ceremony was performed by the Bishop, assisted by the Venerable Archdeacon of Madras, and the happy couple are to go home for their honeymoon. Mr. Breeks is a civilian of twelve years' standing, and has been private secretary on a pay of Rs. 1,500 per mensem for nearly two years. His Excellency's brother, Colonel Denison, has been gazetted military secretary to the Governor, vice Captain Glover, who has resigned the office and been appointed first aide-de-camp. Lieutenant E. Velliers, of H.M.'s 49th Light Infantry, has been confirmed as extra aide-de-camp. Among our approaching departures is that of the Hon. T. Sydney Smith, the Advocate General. As his house and furniture are advertised for sale, it is believed that he proposes returning home for good, and many conjectures are made as to his successor. The talented J. B. Norton, Clerk of the Crown, is mentioned as the most probable candidate, and there seems every likelihood of his accepting the post if it be offered. We are rather anxious to keep Mr. Norton in Madras, especially since he began to aspire to promotion in Calcutta.

THE "JASON."—The decision of the commissioners of enquiry into the loss of the S.S. Jason has been announced, and, as was to be expected, is unfavourable to Captain Hurst. They stated that, after mature deliberation, they were unable to acquit him of blame, being of opinion that the Jason was lost in consequence of several grave omissions on his part. From the evidence it was clear that no attempt was made to anchor the vessel after five fathoms had been sounded, notwithstanding that at least a quarter of an hour had elapsed between that time and the grounding of the ship; and though it was urged in defence that it would have been dangerous to have let go the anchor at the last moment, the commissioners thought otherwise. Evidently the supposition of the compasses being incorrect was fallacious, the light having been made out the very time when the captain looked for it. The commissioners, therefore, had resolved to suspend Captain Hurst's certificate for a period of one year, and requested that it might be given up to them to be forwarded to the Board of Trade. But the captain very unwisely declines to surrender it, and, through his solicitor, protested against the jurisdiction and decision of the court, and seeks to have an opportunity of raising the question in a higher court. The case will probably go on to the High Court, and it is possible that a new trial will be called for and allowed; but this highly imprudent act of Captain Hurst, to have the matter re-investigated, is not likely to alter the decision above stated, which is justified by all the evidence. It is thought here, that so far from being treated unjustly, Captain Hurst has got off uncommonly easy; and instead of wasting his little capital in legal proceedings, refreshers, retainers, and hotel expenses, he should calmly and resignedly accept the sentence, and go home sharp, and commence at once to seek employment at the expiration of the suspension. The Jason came to grief in a most inexcusable manner; and the underwriters at Lloyd's who paid the £30,000 insurance on her, are not likely to forget this for some time; and shipowners will be wary before employing the commander.

EUROPEAN VAGRANCY IN INDIA.—In his last minute on European vagrancy in India, Sir Wm. Mansfield, contending those who produce vagrancy should consume it, assumes that those who import or employ European labour in this country, discharging the employes without providing for their return to Europe, produce European vagrancy, which he further terms the smoke of European enterprise, which the employers should be compelled to consume as manufacturers in England are their own smoke. The Bombay Chamber rather happily answers this as follows:—"His Excellency assumes that those who import or employ European labour in India produce vagrancy, which he terms the 'smoke' of commercial enterprise, and he, therefore, contends that there is as little hardship in forcing them to consume vagrancy, as there is in compelling manufacturers to consume smoke. It reverses, in an eccentric manner, all recognised principles, to charge the capitalist or employer with the 'wanton production of vagrancy,' and with all respect it seems to the committee, that it would be as appropriate to render the importer or dealer in coals responsible for the manufacturer's smoke as to make the importer or employer of European labour accountable for vagrancy. Vagrancy, which is a thing quite distinct from honest distress, is neither produced by the engagement, nor by the discharge of a servant, for there is a wide field for skilled and intelligent labour in India, and generally speaking it is only through vice or misconduct that a European falls into its ranks." The Chamber has the best of the argument. The State, that is the entire community, and not commerce should provide for the unemployed and needy.—Phoenix, Feb. 28.

TIGERS.—Octacumund is gaining an unenviable notoriety for ferocious monster tigers. Our readers will remember that only a few weeks ago, one of those gentlemen walked off with one of Mr. Rhode's favourite oxen, while the owner was looking at him. Another giant, measuring eleven feet in length, was shot the other day only about two miles away from St. Stephen's Church. We now hear that two gentlemen, while sporting, met with another of these pleasant creatures. As he looked ill-tempered, the nearest tree appeared the safest place. Unfortunately, one gentleman, miscalculating the power and desire of the tiger, did not mount sufficiently high. With a roar and a leap, the beast reached the leg of his victim, and tore him to the ground without relaxing its hold. The other sportsman, in his anxiety to place twenty feet between him and the animal, did not observe all this. Having, however, reached a safe position, he turned and fired. Fortunately the shot was well aimed, and the tiger fell dead upon his prey. When brought into Ooty, he was found to measure upwards of ten feet in length. We believe that the rescued gentleman is out of danger.—Madras Times, Feb. 28.

MADRAS UNIVERSITY.—I hear that the results of the late examination of candidates for the degrees in arts and law, which recently took place here in connection with the University, has, on the whole, passed off satisfactorily. Of twelve candidates in arts eight have passed, and several others have passed off in the faculty of law; amongst these latter is a Hindoo from Bombay named Nanabhoy Hurridass, who came round here for the purpose. It seems strange that any one should take the trouble to come here to study law when there is a law class with able professors in the University of Bombay; but I believe this may be accounted for by the fact that the "passes" of the Madras University are not so difficult of ascent as those of the sister institution at the Western Presidency. I also hear that no fewer than two thousand persons went up the other day in the hope of being able to pass the "general test" of the examination for the uncoventanted Civil Service; but I have not heard how many of these have succeeded, or how many have been "spun." Of these candidates five hundred were from the presidency town alone.

THE RAILWAY.—The Madras Railway begins to pay, and the company is looking up. The average receipts per mile is now about Rs. 130 against Rs. 88 last year. When the line is opened to Bangalore, say in the middle of next year, the receipts should be still more satisfactory.

LANCASHIRE RELIEF FUND.—Amongst other means that have been successfully adopted in Madras for raising funds for the relief of the distressed operatives of Lancashire, I may mention the exhibition of foreign poultry and birds, consisting of Bantam, Java, and Manilla fowls, Canara doves, guinea fowls, partridges, Singapore parrots, &c., &c., which was got up by Dr. Shortt, of Chingleput. The exhibition took place at Taylor and Co.'s rooms, on the 18th instant; and the various specimens of the feathered tribe were all sold off at fancy prices, the proceeds being handed over to the Lancashire Relief Fund.

BOMBAY.

THE KHANDALLAH AFFRAY.

The Khandallah affray is chiefly noticeable, we think, for the extraordinary comments of the press thereon. One of our contemporaries finds in it a new illustration of the principle "which is so commonly acted upon, that any indignity may be offered with impunity to Englishmen who do not belong to the covenanted civil service," and describes it as "a murderous and unprovoked attack made upon a party of officers of the Bombay army by the civil authorities." The active imagination of this writer has discovered that it now only "needs that a traveller should be alone and unarmed anywhere in India—to feel that it is, in fact, a disqualification to him to belong to the governing race—and that he may esteem himself lucky if he be not made the victim of the people's hatred of their conquerors." The affray was brought about, we are told, by the civil authorities of Khandallah inciting an "infuriated populace" to murder half a dozen inoffensive officers, who were passing through the village, on their way to Bombay.

Another contemporary writes gravely upon this incident as follows: "Resistance to British authority on a large scale is not likely to occur, but on a small scale it is certain to occur constantly, in the shape of petty persecution of individuals and the gratification of spite. So long as this goes on, the army cannot lay down its arms; the country can never be considered at peace; and the persons who really rule it are the officers of the army, who hold it by the rifles of their soldiers. . . . When civil and military authorities come into collision, the civil should immediately give way, because military operations in this country, are as in a theatre of war, of primary necessity, and everything else must be postponed to them. And lastly, officers of the army should be held responsible only to military courts. The civil magistrate may be useful in a subordinate way to deal out justice among the natives; but he should by no means be permitted to sit in judgment on military men. They have their own chiefs to answer to, and should be held exempt from all jurisdiction of a police magistrate." When the English press commits itself to writing of this order, it would be absurd to look for more discretion in the native press. That educated men can produce, or educated men tolerate, such writing is almost inconceivable.

What are the simple facts of this story? Khandallah happens to be a village crowded with natives, and with Europeans employed upon the railway works in its neighbourhood. There is probably no station in India, where a thoroughly effective police force is more required; a police force courageous enough to do its duty, towards the class of Europeans at work in its neighbourhood, as well as to the vast concourse of native labourers drawn there from all parts of the presidency. There are at this moment not less, we believe, than 24,000 native labourers at work upon the Ghat, and a large body of overseers and workmen, possessing the energy of the lower orders of our countrymen, and many of them stained by the worst vices of the railway navy. The local Saturday Reviewer, whose remarks upon this affair we have referred to above, tells us that "there is an old grudge between the railway people and the villagers of Khandallah." That "the railway people" should have given any offence to "the villagers," however, is not to be believed for a moment. The villagers of Khandallah have a natural "hatred of their conquerors." Knowing, as we all do, how mild and inoffensive a race the railway navy represents, it can plainly be nothing but the inherent wickedness of the people that has caused the feud. To suppose that the villagers have ever sustained rough usage from railway men, or their women any interference, would be so atrocious a libel on one's countrymen, that the English journalist who should venture to suggest it would deserve to be pilloried. It is important, however, to note that ill-feeling did exist between the railway people and the villagers; and that the police authorities at Khandallah must have had a pretty active time of it between the two.

In this somewhat electrical state of matters, half a dozen English officers passing through the station, and in no way distinguished by their dress as belonging to the army, took upon themselves to break the custody of two men, who were in regular charge of the police, and set them free. We admit frankly that so great was the temptation to do so, under circumstances fresh in our readers' memory, that ninety-nine Englishmen out of every hundred in the country would have yielded to it. The act was nevertheless illegal and improper. Under ordinary circumstances no harm would have resulted from it, but falling as a spark upon gunpowder, it at once produced an affray; in which, as might have been expected, the villagers took part with the police. So "murderous" were their intentions, however, that all the party but one were allowed to escape to the police-office at the cost of a few bruises and some hustling. One gentleman, Mr. Tate, received a severe blow on the head, and Mr. Tate is a railway man. He is, moreover, declared to be in the cowardly habit of kicking the natives of the country. We cannot tell whether the charge is true or false. We only know that a complaint against him, of this very nature, is now before his superior officers. The case was investigated at great length before the Poonah magistrate, and several of the police peons sent to gaol, either for themselves beating, or for allowing the villagers to beat, the officers in question.

Now the moral we venture to draw from this story is this—that at a station like Khandallah, the police force should be under European superintendence. This affray and its result augur no good to the villagers of Khandallah. The only support it can wear to them, is one by no means complimentary to our administration of justice. If we are not prepared to maintain the authority of the native police over all persons, European as well as native, then must we have a European police in the station, whom we will uphold, at all hazards. It plainly was not the police who were the aggressors in this affray, however badly they acted, when in it; and instead of calling out for the subordination of the police to every man who may represent himself as an officer when he gets into trouble, we should take care to have the police so organised that the European will respect it as well as the native.—Times of India, March 4.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COTTON.—The Bombay cotton crop of the present season is likely we fear, after all, to disappoint home expectations. From the Oomrawuttee, Akote, and Hingun Ghaut districts (Berar) there are concurrent reports of a deficient outturn, and the crop had been estimated at not more than one half its usual extent. Unseasonable rains are said to have done this mischief, and so consistent are the advices from parties variously interested in the result that we may reasonably fear the predictions upon the subject are but too well founded. At Bhowungur, again (the headquarters of the Dholera districts), a falling off is now seriously apprehended, and it is difficult to contract for any cotton of this growth for forward delivery. From the Guzent districts, and especially from Broach, we have similar complaints, and after duly allowing for the interested representations of dealers, we doubt if any excess upon last year's crop can be looked for, in spite of the increased breadth of land which was put under seed during last sowings. The heavy rains of November and December have not only destroyed the hopes of a large outturn, but have seriously damaged the colour of the Dholera staple, which is likely to come forward with a good deal of stain upon it. The report of injury to the crops by worm is doubtful, though possibly some slight damage has been sustained from this cause. From Veraval and Mangrove we have news very like the above. From Compta, however, no such disparaging advices have come to hand, and, speaking generally, this variety will probably show the most satisfactory outturn. On the whole, it is doubtful whether the supply of cotton from this side of India in the current year will not even fall short of that of 1862. We regret to learn that the dealers are systematically adulterating the Oomrawuttee, Akote, Vingorla, and even Dholera cotton with the short-stapled growths of Scinde, and also Bengal. It is stated that native dealers, experienced in the trade, have this season established agencies at Kurrahee and other places, for the express purpose of bringing cotton thence to mix with "Surats." A Calcutta circular notices the fact that some 7,000 to 8,000 bales of Bengal cotton have been shipped for this port for a similar purpose. This is only partially the case, however, as a visit to the local screws would show; Bengal cotton being screwed by itself in fair and legitimate manner. It is, we believe, impossible at present to tell what the extent of our crop will be, but we fear that too sanguine expectations are entertained of it at home. It is from Nagpore alone that we have any accounts that we can fully rely upon. A late official report from this province states, "that notwithstanding the season having been partly unfavourable, the area under cotton cultivation has increased from 496,171 acres in 1861 to 586,650 acres in 1862, and the production from 34,523,558 lbs. in 1861 to 47,344,914 lbs. in 1862, showing an increase of 18 per cent. in area, and of 37 per cent. in produce, which increase is attributable in part, but not entirely, to the enhanced rate of prices." This increase, however, is almost too unimportant to notice, consisting of only 32,000 bales.

THE PROJECTED INDIAN TRAMWAY COMPANY.—We are glad to report that the Indian Tramway Company, under the stimulus of Sir John Login's presence amongst us, is likely to commence operations at no distant period. The first line which it is proposed to construct is that from Gogo to Ahmedabad, via Lanwee and Veerungam. This line has been adopted upon the recommendation of the Provisional Committee at Bombay. The committee say, "The traffic on this line would undoubtedly be very great, and we believe it would meet with such acceptance on the part of the public of this Presidency as would enable the company to go at once to Government with such an amount of support as to claim their most favourable consideration. Among our own friends and constituents we feel sure we may count upon getting a very considerable amount of capital subscribed, and as soon as matters are sufficiently advanced we shall be happy to use our utmost influence in promoting the scheme." With these promises to assure them, the company ought not to hesitate to go forward; the local committee numbers in its body representatives of the most influential firms of the place—Ritchie Stuart and Co., Forbes and Co., Nicol and Co., and others. It is not very creditable to European enterprise that the Baroda prince has been allowed to take the start of us in this matter. On the small two feet six inches tramway now being constructed by the Guicowar, whose intelligence in thus initiating this enterprise is truly admirable, loads of six tons, exclusive of the waggons, are to be seen drawn by single pairs of bullocks, with greater ease and speed than we can now convey half a ton over any Government road in the district. So much is this tramway appreciated, we are told, by the people along the line, that during the monsoon of last year, when a small part of it only had been completed, no less than three rupees per bale were offered and given for the conveyance of cotton for a distance of eight miles. The transport was otherwise impossible from the state of the roads. When "the native princes" of the Empire are setting us this example, it is time that we bestirred ourselves. Should the American war last for another six months, money will be a drug in this market, and the company and the Government between them should prepare to take full advantage of the fact.

COLONEL OUCHTERLONY has been in Bombay for the last week or two, trying, but without much success, we are sorry to hear, to persuade the rich men of the place to take a number of shares in his Contract Building Company. The colonel, in his zeal, has given much offence by publishing in the Madras papers a private letter (containing some rather indiscreet admissions about the weakness of the P. W. D.), from Colonel Rivers to Mr. Scott, and this is said to be one of the causes of the ill success of his visit to Bombay. Add to this that there are so many other speculations before the public just now which promise larger and more immediate profits as to make people think less than it deserves of the Contract Building project. Colonel Ouchterlony will probably do better with capitalists at home than with those of Bombay.—Bombay Saturday Review.

Clasp for Pekin.

The Secretary of State for War has, with the concurrence of H.R.H. the Field Marshal commanding-in-chief, determined that the clasp for Pekin, granted by the G.O. No. 778, dated March 6, 1861, with the China medal to those troops who were present before that city on the 13th October, 1860, when it was captured, shall also be given to those who were engaged in the actions of the 18th and 21st of September, 1860. General officers and commanding officers of regiments will therefore transmit to the Adjutant-general, Horse Guards, a nominal roll in duplicate of any troops engaged in the two last mentioned actions who may have been prevented by wounds or other causes from being present at the fall of Pekin on the 13th October, forwarding at the same time the medals of such claimants with a view to the clasp alluded to being added to them.—By command, &c., JAS. YORKE SCARLETT, Adjutant-general.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 13th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

To Correspondents.

All letters for insertion in Allen's Indian Mail should be accompanied with the real name and address of the writer, "not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, April 6, 1863.

THE LATE EAST INDIA COMPANY'S ARMY.

THE officers of the Indian army will perceive by the following notification that there is really no desire on the part of the Legislature to place any obstacles in the way of a full statement and discussion of their complaints against the Amalgamation measure.

"We are requested to state, for the information of officers of the late East India Company's army, that statements of their complaints and other communications on the subject, for which the Royal Commission of Inquiry has been granted, should be sent without delay, to the address of Lieutenant-colonel North, 11, King-street, St. James's-square, S.W."—Times, March 30.

We cannot doubt that many cases of great individual hardship will be laid before the Royal Commissioners by the sufferers themselves, and as that ardent and generous friend of the Indian army, the Earl of Ellenborough, is a member of the Commission, we may feel well assured that no such grievances will pass wholly unconsidered or unredressed. There is reason to believe also that in addition to, or quite independently of, their individual appeals, the Indian army will act as one general body, and take care that its common interests are properly supported, either by the personal explanations of able and experienced representatives before the Commissioners, or by some careful and well-authenticated written statement of its claims.

Perhaps it would be equally decorous and prudent in the officers of the army to abstain from all appeals to the public through the medium of the press while the subject is under the immediate consideration of the Royal Commissioners; for it can hardly be fair or judicious to lay the same case before two such very different tribunals at the same time, or to imply thereby a want of confidence in the integrity or ability of the adjudicators appointed by the Crown. The best course now to be adopted is to take all possible and legitimate means to secure to the Commissioners every variety of information that may assist them to arrive at a correct decision.

There are two leading points for the consideration of the Commission. The first is whether there has been any actual breach of contract on the part of the Government towards the army—"any departure from the assurance held out by the 21st and 22nd Vic., cap. 106, sec. 5, and the 23rd and 24th Vic., cap. 100, to her Majesty's Indian Military Forces"—and the second is whether by the amalgamation of her Majesty's Indian forces with her Majesty's general forces individuals may have suffered injuries un contemplated by the authorities, perhaps to be regarded as strictly exceptional in their nature, and to be attributed rather to some oversight in matters of detail incident at the first working to all great and sudden changes, than to any inherent and lasting defect of the whole arrangement.

In providing the Commissioners with materials for forming a sound judgment on these points, we would earnestly recommend that the querulous and carping and offensive tone of too many communications to the press upon the subject should be most carefully avoided, for no body of men ought to exhibit a higher sense of that discipline which demands respect for constituted authorities than the officers of an army. Expressions of distrust and ill-will, and direct or indirect implications of a desire on the part of the authorities to act harshly and dishonestly cannot possibly strengthen the claims of any body of men, however meritorious, or advance any cause however just. We have read several effusions of the nature alluded to with a degree of pain and vexation proportioned to our respect for so fine a body of officers as those of the Indian army, who have exhibited in the field the sublimest examples, not of physical courage merely, but of moral heroism and a high and chivalrous sense of duty, of patient endurance and unpretending fortitude, under the most terrible trials and privations. Such men may well afford to state their strongest claims in the most moderate language, and feel assured that they will not be disregarded by their grateful and admiring country. The heroes who have saved India to the British Crown and raised the high name of England still higher, and have contributed some of the grandest materials to the historic page of this nineteenth century, have little chance of being treated with flagrant injustice either by a small but powerful party of their own countrymen or by the nation at large. All that is needed is what is now offered them—an ample opportunity to state their case. We congratulate them heartily on this great advantage. We will not, we cannot believe for a single moment that the British Legislature, after due inquiry and discussion into the claims of the Indian army, could so disgrace and damnify itself as to persist in the support of any proved breach of contract to the cruel injury of a body of men who have so won the admiration of the world by their chivalrous and patriotic services to their country.

PRICE OF LABOUR IN INDIA.—PRESENT SOCIAL STATE OF CALCUTTA.

SIR CHARLES MACARTHY, the Governor of Ceylon, has left Colombo for the central capital, and the principal Government officials are to follow him. It is said that it is his Excellency's intention to send out in several directions in the island itself for labourers on public works, and that he has also directed Mr. Gillman, Acting Landing Surveyor of Customs at St. John's River, to proceed to Southern India, with full powers to engage a large number of Coolies on behalf of the Ceylon Government. Labour is now costly enough in the East. Until a few years ago

India was the cheapest labour market in the world: that is to say, in no other part of the world was an individual labourer more lightly paid. And yet he got quite as much as he was worth, and even more. For if his employer paid him but little he got but little work from him in return, and had to pay dearly in the end for the necessary multiplication of idle and feeble hands. One English or Irish labourer, in a cool climate, would do the work of a dozen Indian labourers in their own land, and, though higher paid, he would be cheaper to his employer. But even the individual labourer in India is now an experienced workman. It was lately asserted in the Legislative Council of Bengal that on some tea plantations in India a Coolie, who once thought himself well paid at two rupees eight annas a month, can now earn thirty rupees a month. This vast change in the value of labour in India must throw serious obstacles in the way of all great undertakings there for the benefit of the country and its commerce, and the Bengal Government begins at last to be perplexed and alarmed on the subject, and to be meditating schemes to discourage Coolie emigration. No one can now talk of India being overpopulated. Builders cannot in these days run up houses at the cheap rate at which the work was formerly accomplished. The European population of Calcutta is increasing, and house-rent is rising rapidly, and native servants demand nearly double their old wages. On these accounts very many private families give up housekeeping, and find it cheaper to live at hotels or boarding-houses. Of these convenient establishments there is now a remarkable abundance; and of course a great scarcity of private Red Lions. All old Indians must remember the time when almost every house was an inn, where every respectable Englishman, on the slightest introduction, could obtain food and shelter and a cordial welcome, unattended by the presentation of a bill of costs. That time has quite gone by, and is never likely to return. Calcutta, once the gayest and most hospitable city in the world, where balls and burra khannas, and musical parties and soirées, and all sorts of pleasant gatherings were so numerous, that a man of society would receive a dozen different invitation cards for the same day, is now thoroughly Anglicised, and its social life is as dull and cold as any crowded city of shopkeepers and mechanics or manufacturers in our native land. The rupee tree no longer drops its golden fruit in abundant showers. Economy is the order of the day, and the stranger in Calcutta is reminded of the sentiment in Shenstone's familiar verse, which was quoted with such pathetic sympathy by Dr. Johnson:—

Where'er his stages may have been,
Will sigh to think he still has found
His warmest welcome at an inn."

"LA GUERRE DU NIZAM."—CHARACTER OF THE ANGLO-INDIANS.

WHEN a native of the British Isles prepares himself for a work of fiction, he does not think it prudent to rely wholly upon his imagination. However fanciful the superstructure, the foundation of his edifice usually rests on solid truth. Thus our Swifts and Defoes never wholly lose sight of human nature, and Shakespeare and Walter Scott preserve the spirit of history amidst a thousand wilful or fantastical errors or changes of detail. Our most fanciful tales are often like the most inspired poetry, only

"Truth severe, in fairy fiction drest."

And when particular classes of people or national characteristics are to be described, a perfect fidelity of portraiture is deemed, even by the novelist, a most essential requisite. French authors seem to be more adventurous or less conscientious. Their audacity is quite startling to the sober apprehension of an English reader. Thus we have a new novel, entitled "La Guerre du Nizam," in which an attempt is made to describe Anglo-Indian Society, by an author who not only could never have visited India himself, but who apparently has not even taken the trouble to prepare himself for his task by the study of a single work on the state of that country. In one respect Monsieur Mery, the author of this novel, fulfils the condition of the poet. He is "of imagination all compact." He "bodies forth the forms of things unknown, and gives to airy nothing a local habitation and a name." His fiction has no groundwork of reality. Without the slightest information relating to his subject, he scribbles on with the most ludicrous self-confidence: most ignorant of what he is most assured. He describes a Colonel Douglas, of the Indian army, makes him fall in love with what he calls a "Brainahnesse," the daughter of a trader in diamonds. His private love affairs are submitted to the Minister of the "Foreign-office"—a foreign subject indeed to that official, who issues his orders, however, as a mere matter of course. "It is only diplomatists," says Monsieur Mery, "who arrange impossible marriages. Love is wiser than Lord Palmerston though the noble lord calls himself Cupid." Here are sober sense and plain matter of fact! The Bengal colonel is represented as an expert diver. The pearls he presents to his lady love he has dived for himself in "the Sea of Ceylon." Indian officers are not only expert divers, it seems, but expert climbers, because "accustomed to the summits of palm trees or the masts of vessels." Monsieur Mery tells us of terrible pitched battles between large armies of Thugs (described as armies of fanatics), under a native chief, and armies of Sepoys, commanded by British officers. There is no national partiality or spite in the author. He seems indeed well enough disposed towards us, and is to be condemned, not for malicious misrepresentation, but the most culpable ignorance of the subject on which he treats, for unconscious caricature of our national character, and the wildest nonsense, the latter being the necessary result of an ill-directed imagination.

Monsieur Mery reminds us very much of a brother scribe and fellow-countryman of his, a Monsieur Francis Wey, who undertook to give the world a correct description of English manners and customs. Monsieur gives us the following account of the habits of some of the principal bankers of London. It quite matches Monsieur Mery's descriptions of Anglo-Indian officers:—

"Some of the principal bankers in London go every morning to the butcher's shops to buy their own chops. They carry them openly to some tavern in Cheap-side or Fleet-street, where they cook them themselves. Then they buy a three penny worth of rye bread, and publicly eat this Spartan breakfast. The exhibition fills their clients with admiration.

But in the evening these good men make up for this by taking in their own palaces suppers worthy of Lucullus."

Monsieur Wey, a member of the politest community in the world, next gives a very graphic, but highly imaginative, description of the vulgar brutality of the English at their most fashionable places of public amusement. According to this veracious Frenchman, it requires some courage to venture upon a visit to Her Majesty's Theatre in the Haymarket. "When the doors are opened blows with the fist and elbow are given without regard to age or sex. It is the peculiar fashion of entering which the natives have. If a Frenchman be recognised the people cry French dog! In the pit the man before you will place his feet on your shoulders."

"A proof," says the same sagacious and truthful writer, "that the English are really nothing but shopkeepers is the fact that the first functionary sits in a gilded chair upon a wool-sack."

We need quote no more from these French romancists. In spite of their preposterous falsehoods it would be silly to be angry with them. We can only answer them with a good-humoured laugh. We are perhaps the more inclined to be indulgent to Monsieur Wey, because, though he does not spare the English sterner sex, he is very complimentary to our women. "There is no exaggeration," he observes, "in what has been said of the beauty of English women: an assembly of them would realise the paradise of Mahomet."

THE PROPOSED NEW GENERAL HOSPITAL AT BOMBAY.

THE Bombay Government has resolved to erect on the Esplanade at Bombay a new General Hospital for Europeans. Not willing, it seems, to trust exclusively to the skill or taste of the engineers and builders at that Presidency, the Bombay Government has by public advertisement in the London papers invited general competition for the prize of Rs. 2,500 for the best design for the building, and Rs. 1,000 for the next in merit. The estimate for the building is not to exceed Rs. 3,80,000. The designers are to bear in mind the character of the climate, to remember that the building must be well ventilated, and to take care that the walls are protected as much as possible from the direct rays of the sun. Every necessary information will be received on application at the India-office in London, or at the office of the Superintending Engineer at Bombay. We think the Government has acted quite fairly, and served the public interests, by inviting this general competition in more than one country.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MARCH 27.
SALE OF WASTE LANDS AND LAW OF CONTRACTS IN INDIA.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved for the production of the same papers as had been presented to the House of Commons on the subject of the sale of waste lands in India. He begged also to ask whether there was any objection to lay on the table papers with respect to the law of contracts in India?

Earl GRANVILLE said he had no objection to the production of the returns with regard to the waste lands. Very voluminous papers on the subject of contracts had been presented, but the correspondence was not quite concluded, and it would not be perfectly convenient to produce it.

The motion was agreed to.

SEAT OF THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT.—NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES OF INDIA.

Mr. VANSITTART observed that it would be in the recollection of the House that three evenings since, on asking the Secretary of State for India whether it was true that he had issued instructions to move the seat of Government of the North-Western Provinces from Agra to Allahabad, and to produce the correspondence, the only answer the right hon. baronet condescended to give was a flat denial. He would, therefore, with the permission of the House, read a copy of a despatch addressed by the right hon. baronet to the Governor-general so recently as November last, in inserting which the Indian journalist remarked—"It is now settled that Allahabad is to be the seat of Government of the North-Western Provinces. We give a prominent place to the despatch on this subject from Sir Charles Wood."

"No. 45 of 1862.

"To his Excellency the Right Hon. the Governor-general of India in Council.

"India-office, London, Nov. 29, 1862.

"My Lord,—I have had before me in Council your letter No. 58 of the 5th of September last, and its enclosures, regarding the proposed construction of public buildings at Allahabad, in consequence of the removal thither of the seat of Government of the North-Western Provinces. Captain Peile, Executive Engineer at Allahabad, has been instructed to prepare revised designs without loss of time, taking care to keep the estimated outlay within sixteen lacs of rupees. For this sum it is expected that the office establishments of all the civil departments of Government may be located in substantial, commodious, and handsome buildings, arranged so as to allow of any communication with each other and with the Government-house, which last edifice is to be provided for by separate estimate. I approve of the orders you have given.—I have, &c. "C. Wood.

"By order of his Honour the Lieutenant-governor North-Western Provinces,

"W. E. MORTON, Lieutenant-colonel,

"Secretary to Government."

He now trusted that the House would think him perfectly justified in asking the right hon. gentleman to reconcile the answer he gave on Tuesday with this despatch. Without entering into the question on the present occasion, of the necessity of abandoning Agra, or whether in that case Bareilly, the capital of Rohilkund, the finest climate in the North-West, and which also adjoins Oude, would not be more central and more salubrious than Allahabad, situated at the extremity of the presidency of the North-West, and notoriously one of the hottest cities in India, he would merely add that, up to the present time, he had had no cause to complain of any want of courtesy on the part of the right hon. baronet, and was therefore unprepared for the altered tone which he assumed towards him on Tuesday. Under these circumstances, he hoped the right hon. baronet would be good enough to explain the precise part he had taken in the question of the removal of the seat of Government of the North-Western Provinces from Agra to Allahabad?

Sir C. Wood expressed regret to find that the hon. member fancied there was something discourteous in the reply given the other evening. With regard to this matter, he had no difficulty in reconciling the answer he gave on Tuesday with the answer he should now give. The Government of India took on itself, without any communication with the Secretary of State for India, to remove the seat of Government from Agra to Allahabad, and the Secretary of State gave no sanction or instructions with respect to that transfer. Whether the Indian Government were right in their mode of proceeding he did not pretend to say; but thinking the change from Agra to Allahabad on the whole advantageous, he was not disposed to quarrel with the mode of making it. A year and a-half afterwards, a question arose as to certain expenditure on public buildings in consequence of the change, and the despatch quoted was the reply sent to communications respecting that expenditure.

THE SCINDE RAILWAY.

The eighth annual general meeting of the proprietors of the above company was held on Monday, March 30th, at the London Tavern; Mr. W. P. Andrew in the chair.

The report was taken as read.

The Chairman stated that the traffic on the Scinde Railway, which that time last year had only just been completed, had equalled their most sanguine expectations. The exports of cotton from Kurrachee during the current year were estimated at 100,000 bales, representing £1,000,000, and next year it was expected the export would reach 150,000 bales. The trade in wool, silk, flax, and all the great staples required for the manufactures of this country, was progressing in the same manner. To give an idea of the ratio in which this advance was taking place, he might mention that the total trade of the port of Kurrachee in 1861-2 amounted to £3,000,000; whereas, during the first nine months of the year 1862-3, it had increased to £3,500,000, and it was estimated that it would amount for the year to at least £5,000,000. The line from Lahore to Mooltan was proceeding with great rapidity. It had been greatly delayed by the difficulty of getting timber for the sleepers down from the Himalayas, owing to the want of water in the rivers during the past two or three years; but they were now sending out Grievess's patented iron sleepers, which required no timber and very little ballast. Fifty miles of these sleepers had already been provided, and there was every reason to believe that by the end of next year the line would be opened throughout, and that an enormous impetus would thus be given to the trade between Kurrachee and the upper districts, as well as with Central Asia generally. With regard to the Delhi Railway, they would see by the report that the Government of India considered it, as of all others, the most likely to bring a large remunerative return, owing to the densely-populated district it accommodated, and the trade of that part of India. Although the merchants and people of Delhi were opposed to the railway in the first instance, they were now very much in its favour.

Mr. T. H. Maddocks seconded the motion for the adoption of the report, and, after a brief discussion, it was carried.

The Chairman, in answer to Mr. Goetz, said there would be no call on the Punjab line for several months, and none on the Delhi this year, and perhaps not next year.

Messrs. Thomas Williams and Harry Borradale, the retiring directors, and Mr. Philip Anstruther, the retiring auditor, were unanimously re-elected.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE ORDER OF THE BATH.—(War-office, Pall-mall, March 31.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Lieutenant-colonel Arthur Purves Phayre, of the Bengal Staff Corps, Chief Commissioner of British Burma, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

APPOINTMENT (Admiralty, March 31).—Rear-Admiral of the Blue Augustus Leopold Kuper, C.B., to be Vice-Admiral of the Blue, until further orders, and whilst employed as Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's ships and vessels within the limits of the East India station.

LOSS OF THE SHIP "INDIA."—A letter from Commander A. C. Stode, of her Majesty's troopship Vulcan, has been received by Captain Halstead, R.N., the secretary at Lloyd's, giving an account of the loss of the ship India in the Straits of Malacca. It appears that at 2 o'clock on the 25th of January last, from the deck of the Vulcan, then in the Straits of Malacca, in lat. 2°41' N., and long. 101°15' E., a boat was observed making signals of distress. On communicating with her it was found that the ship India, 1,030 tons, had been wrecked about sixteen miles off, with 669 passengers on board. The Vulcan proceeded towards the place indicated, bearing about S.W. by S., and shortly saw her fore and mizen masts, the mainmast being gone. After proceeding about five miles the Vulcan picked up another boat, with the master of the ship and 80 women and children in her, and so overloaded as to be nearly sinking. At this point the water shoaled to four and three-and-a-quarter fathoms. The Vulcan reversed her engines, and went astern, and then being near the northern edge of the South Sands anchored. They ascertained that the India had left Singapore on the 13th inst., bound to Jeddah, in the Red Sea, with natives on board going on a pilgrimage to that place, and numbered 504 men, 45 women, 120 children, and a crew of 45. The ship had got ashore on the South Sands on the 22nd inst., and was now lying on her side, with her bottom bilged in several places. From the dangerous nature of the soundings it was not considered safe to go nearer to her, but the eight boats were immediately hoisted out and sent away. They returned during the night, and up to 4 o'clock in the morning, loaded with passengers from the wreck, and in two or three hours were again sent away. The boats continued working until the night of the 27th, by which time the passengers were all on board, with a considerable amount of valuable property. When the Vulcan left, on the morning of the 28th, the holds of the wreck were flooded up to the hatchways at high water, and it was not considered likely she would hold together long. The crew and passengers had all been landed.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 6,000,000 rupees (£600,000) in Bills on India took place on Wednesday, at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were—to Calcutta, Rs. 3,060,000; to Bombay, Rs. 2,400,000; and to Madras, Rs. 34,000. The declared minimum price was as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 2s. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for about 110 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will be allotted in full, on Bombay at 2s. will receive about 17 per cent., and above that price in full on Madras at 2s. will receive in full.

THE AGRA AND UNITED SERVICE BANK.—The directors of the Agra and United Service Bank have just published their report, in anticipation of the general meeting of shareholders. The accounts have been made up to the end of the past year, and exhibit a surplus of £173,815. 17s. 5d. The managers express their regret for the very serious loss their institution has sustained by the opium frauds at Hong Kong, the whole of which they have written off to debit of the reserve fund. Out of the surplus stated above, the usual dividends and bonus, amounting to £120,000, have been paid, and the balance, viz., £53,815. 17s. 5d., has been transferred to credit of the reserve fund, which, with the addition, will now stand at £192,658. 17s. 8d.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The steamer Ripon took, on the 4th inst., £190,146 in specie for the East, of which £10,760 is gold, and the rest silver. The bulk (£138,184) is for Hong Hong.

ARRIVAL OF A TROOP SHIP FROM INDIA.—(PLYMOUTH, April 1.)—Messrs. T. and W. Smith's ship Hotspur, Captain H. Toynbee, has passed up Channel from Calcutta, Dec. 25; Cape of Good Hope, Feb. 12. She brings 122 men, 6 women, and 9 children, military invalids, under the charge of Capt. Fitzgerald, 60th Rifles; Lieut. Alderson, 77th Regt.; and Lieut. Pope, 88th. She has also a large number of passengers from Calcutta, among whom are Major-gen. Sir S. Cotton, Captains Cotton and family; Mitford and family; Carlisle and family; Orchard and family; Lieut. Spragge, R.E.; Alderson, 77th Regt.; Trotman, 60th; Pope, 38th; Glasscock, I.L.C.; Mould, 7th Hussars; and Drs. Grogarty, 52nd Regt.; Starkey, 97th Regt. March 20, in lat. 37° N., lon. 34° W., the Hotspur was overhauled by an American cruiser. The Hotspur's cargo consisted of silk, rice, saltpetre, and indigo.

THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF OUR INDIAN EMPIRE is progressing with steady perseverance. Mr. Blanford's "Memoir on the Cretaceous and other Rocks of the South Arcot and Trichinopoly Districts, Madras," forms Part I. of the fourth volume of Memoirs issued by the Survey. These districts are well known to be rich in fossils, and a monograph of one important group, the Nautiloid Cephalopoda, has been already published. We are glad to find that the natural appearances and properties of the soils and superficial deposits have received care and attention, remembering how intimately connected with the well-being of a country is a right knowledge of its surface-construction and the chemical composition of the deposits which, in many cases, overlie and cover up the harder rocks.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT AT THE LAUNCH OF THE STEAMER "RANGOON."—On Saturday afternoon last an accident befel the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's iron screw steamer Rangoon after she was launched from the iron shipbuilding yard of Messrs. Samuda, at Blackwall, which was likely to have proved of a very serious character to the vessel. The Rangoon is upwards of 2,000 tons register, and in form and build is similar to some of the steamers which have lately been added to the fleet of the company. Owing to the strength of tide which runs in that part of Blackwall Reach near Messrs. Samuda's yard it was necessary to launch the Rangoon at the very top of high water, or what is known as "dead slack," which does not give the ship the advantage of a short rise of tide should she get into any difficulties. Under the charge of Mr. Sandars, the pilot, who has had great experience in launching vessels in the river, the Rangoon left the slip in the most easy style amid the cheering of the spectators, and all seemed fair that the launch would be a most successful one. On reaching the mid channel, and when the impetus with which she had left the yard had somewhat lessened, the anchor was let go, and many fathoms of chain were paid out, so as to bring her up as steadily as practicable. It was then discovered that the anchor would not hold, and that the ship was gradually approaching the opposite (Kent) side of the river. More chain was run out in the hope that she would still bring up, but to no purpose. There was no time or opportunity for the tugs to get hold of her, and she ran stern first, as she came across from the slip, on to the river bank at East Greenwich. Most vigorous efforts were then made to get her off. Several powerful steam tugs pulled away at her, and it was not until the water had receded some feet that the exertions to float her were given up until the next tide. The precaution, however, was taken of bringing the ship more in a line with the shore, and in this position she laid upon the mud with comparatively a very little list. Gangs of labourers were then employed to clear away the earth of the bank round the stern, and everything was done to float the ship at the next flood. Fortunately the springs are now at their height, and shortly after one o'clock yesterday (Sunday) morning it was announced that the ship floated, and the tugs getting hold of her she was towed into the middle of the river and moored off the Folly-house. On hauling in the chain, the cause of the mishap was discovered. It was found that the shank of the anchor had broken short off about a foot or so from the crown or fluke. It was one of Wood's new (two tons) anchors, and it is stated had undergone the usual test. No doubt the sudden strain in bringing the ship up is rather severe, but it is not clear when the fracture took place. It is reported that the steamer had sustained no injury, but it is feared that she must have had some straining.

A WIDOW LADY, residing in the best and most healthy part of Notting-hill, RECEIVES a few YOUNG LADIES to Educate with her own Children, upon moderate terms. Parents residing abroad are assured that every endeavour will be made to promote the comfort and happiness of a home with the advantages of a School. From the proximity of Notting-hill to the West-end of London, the most accomplished professors of music, drawing, &c., can be engaged, when required, upon moderate terms.
Address Mrs. BLAIR LEIGHTON, Lansdowne-crescent, Notting-hill. References: Prof. FARADAY, D.C.L., &c., &c., Royal Institution of Great Britain, London; and Messrs. BOOSEY and SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.
Address, "ALLY," care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

MILITARY EDUCATION.—The Rev. CHARLES J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wrangler, Cambridge, 1852), Rector of Perrival (population 32), begs to inform his Friends that he has REMOVED from the Finchley-road to his Residence (built expressly for him), CASTLEBAR-COURT, EALING, W., where he receives both Senior and Junior Pupils to prepare for the Army, Military Colleges, and the Civil Service.

MILITARY and NAVAL EDUCATION.—A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R. Young, formerly of Belfast College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute. Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

A LADY can strongly recommend an EUROPEAN FEMALE SERVANT, who is accustomed to the care of children, and who wishes to RETURN to Calcutta about the end of April, or in May.

For further particulars apply to C. W. H., care of Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co., 65, Cornhill, London, E.C.

AYAH.—A Lady, now on her way home by the Renown, expected about the 30th of April, wishes to procure a SITUATION with a Lady going to India for a MADRAS EAST INDIA AYAH, who has had charge of three children.

Apply to Mrs. MACLAGAN, 41, Priory-road, Kilburn, London, N.W.

THE COURT CIRCULAR.

THE COURT CIRCULAR—the Leading Fashionable Journal—is published, price Fivepence, every Saturday Morning, by JOSEPH BRUTON, Crane-court, Fleet-street, London.

THE COURT CIRCULAR contains the fullest and most authentic Particulars respecting all Court News and the latest movements in the bona monde.

THE COURT CIRCULAR, though a Class Paper, varies its contents with Politics, Literature, Public Amusements, Tales, Essays, and Reviews of Books. Books for Review to be sent early in the week.

THE COURT CIRCULAR, since it has come under the New Management, has more than QUADRUPLIFIED ITS SUBSCRIPTION LIST, which is rapidly increasing with every new number. It is, therefore, an excellent medium for Advertisements intended for the upper classes.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!—C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mortlin, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post. 93, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

CORALIUM SILEX, an entirely new substance for ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will neither discolour nor decay, remaining firm in the mouth, from one to a complete set, without springs, wires, or any visible attachment. It gives the greatest support to all loose or tender teeth, and answers most perfectly the purposes of mastication and articulation. No painful operation required. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Princess Augusta, the Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, &c. At home from eleven till four. No connection with any person in the same profession.—No. 64, Grosvenor street, Grosvenor square.

TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—Messrs. LEWIN MOSELY and SONS, 30, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W., direct attention to their GUM-COLOURED ENAMELLED BASE FOR ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUM, &c., specially commended at the International Exhibition—Class XII., No. 3556. ALLEN'S

MAPS OF INDIA & CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £3; or, on cloth, in a case, £3. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £2. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of AFGHANISTAN, and the ADJACENT COUNTRIES. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

MAP of CHINA, from the most Authentic Sources of Information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 8s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 11s.

A MAP of the WESTERN PROVINCES of HINDOOSTAN, the PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c., including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £3; rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

MAP of ARABIA, from all the most recent Authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 4 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

HAND-BOOK to the MAPS of INDIA, giving the Latitude and Longitude of all places of note. By Major H. V. STEPHEN, late of Bengal Army Revenue Survey Department. In 18mo, bound, price 5s.

MAP of INDIA; from the most recent Authorities, showing the railways and telegraphs. On two sheets. Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1s. 1s.

MAP of the STEAM COMMUNICATION and OVERLAND ROUTES between ENGLAND, INDIA, CHINA, and AUSTRALIA. In a case, 14s.; on rollers, and varnished, 16s.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinodine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with the principle as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent street, London, W.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-

MILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

TWOFOLD EXTRAORDINARY CURE

EFFECTED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Mr. J. Webb, Boot and Shoemaker, Chapel-street, Cahireevin, Ireland, writes under date Jan. 10, 1863, that he had been afflicted for seventeen years with a most dreadful asthmatic cough and shortness of breath, and latterly was also subject to benumbed sensations in his limbs, attended with heavy drowsy feelings, which threatened an apoplectic fit. In alarm he consulted the most skilful of the profession within many miles of his residence without avail, and fruitlessly used every means recommended by friend, till he heard of the repute of Holloway's remedies, and resolved, with death staring him in the face, to give them a trial. They immediately relieved, and ultimately cured him.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"A portion of this book on Poland by Mr. Sutherland Edwards has already appeared in our columns, though apparently such a small portion that it is substantially a new as well as a highly opportune production."—The Times, April 2, 1863."Mr. Sutherland Edwards not only understands his subject, but what is far more important and uncommon, his readers. He tells his audience precisely the facts which they are desirous to know. The 'Polish Captivity' is full of light but suggestive sketches, pièces justificatives of historic value, national songs and stories, descriptions of Polish towns, Polish nobilities, and Polish women, and is, besides, a book an English lady might read with twice the ease of Mr. Trollope's latest novel."—Spectator, March 28, 1863.

"The book in which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has depicted the 'Polish Captivity' would have been valuable at any time, but the opportuneness of its arrival so enhances its merits, that it is certain to command a greater than ordinary success. It is a subject which few writers are competent to deal with, but Mr. Edwards possesses special qualifications for the task. Personal experience has made him well acquainted with Poland and the Poles; the interest he takes in their fortunes has led him to study the question of their wrongs with zeal and assiduity, and his acquaintance with Slavonic languages enables him to make use of stores of information which are unserviceable to the ordinary student. Consequently, he is entitled to speak with authority, and his opinions on the condition, feelings, and prospects of the various nations which he describes deserve a very different hearing from that which we should give to the crude theories formed by a careless traveller passing hastily through an unfamiliar land."—London Review, March 28, 1863."Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenæum, March 21, 1863.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NITTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nitel and M. Pierre Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenæum, Nov. 15, 1862.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 15th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails, via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE have no intelligence of much importance from India by the present mail; in fact, we have not had a duller budget of Indian news for a long time.

The 10th of March was observed at Madras as a general holiday, in honour of the marriage of the Prince of Wales with Princess Alexandra of Denmark.

The Viceroy is still continuing his almost regal progress through the Northern Provinces.

In his addresses to the native princes and nobles and chieftains, though courteous and conciliatory in the main, he does not hesitate to give them sundry not very palatable hints that the British Indian Government has a powerful military force, a "large and gallant army," at its disposal, and however well inclined to peace, is thoroughly prepared to punish malcontents and rebels. He recommends them to instruct their dependants that they are all now bound to be faithful to their sovereign lady, her Majesty Queen Victoria, Empress of Hindostan. Perhaps such hints are not all ill-timed, for we have rumours of discontent and intrigue amongst some of the Mahratta followers of Nana Sahib, and seditious letters have been discovered to be in circulation in several districts, especially in that of Oude, exciting the believers in the Koran to rise against her Majesty's Government. Some of the parties implicated have been arrested.

Every now and then reports are revived respecting the defunct Nana Sahib. British blood is occasionally warmed with the hope that the rascal still lives, and will be made to swing in the air from the gallows tree. The wish is father to the thought. But there really is no good reason to doubt the result of the inquiries instituted by Government at Katmandoo, and by an emissary of the Englishman. It was now pretty definitely concluded that he had really died very miserably of jungle fever. We may mention an undoubted fact that is strongly confirmatory of this decision—namely, that the Nana's two youngest wives are now in the harem of Jung Bahadoor, and they would not surely be there if the ferocious Nana were still in the land of the living.

We have nothing new to record about Sir Charles Trevelyan and his proceedings. He is quietly busy in preparing his budget. When the Mahomedan community presented him an address and asked for relief from "unnecessary and oppressive taxation," and alluded rather awkwardly to his "known aversion" to such taxation, he took good care, in his reply, to pass over so ticklish a subject. He is more diplomatic a good deal than he used to be;—"High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect."

Mr. Harrington's Waste Lands Bill has passed into law. Waste lands must now, instead of being advertised for sale for one month only, be advertised for a quarter of a year; and instead of the lapse of one year subsequent to sale debarring the original proprietors from all claim, a suit for compensation may be instituted at any time within three years. Special courts of three judges are to be appointed to adjudicate on such claims.

The Governor-general has issued a most complimentary notification on the subject of the services of Mr. Turnbull, the chief engineer of the East Indian Railway Company:

"His Excellency the Viceroy will not fail to bring to the favourable notice of her Majesty's Government the long and excellent services of Mr. Turnbull, who, having been the first railway engineer employed in India, has now happily seen the portion of this great work on which he was more particularly engaged brought to a close after many years of arduous and persevering labour, under circumstances of unusual difficulty, with the most complete satisfaction to his employers and to the Government, and with the highest credit to himself."

The progress of the railway (begun in 1851) has been at the rate of about ninety miles a year, which, considering the nature of the climate, the slow proceedings of native workmen, and the interruptions occasioned by the great mutiny and the Sonthal rebellion, is highly satisfactory. Lord Elgin expressed his astonishment at the surpassing magnitude of the works of the noble girder bridge over the Soane.

It is said that Sir Arthur Buller, late one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Calcutta, and now member of Parliament for Devonport, is about to have a seat in the Council for India. Sir Arthur Buller was a private pupil of the famous Thomas Carlyle, who, in his Life of Stirling, calls him "the handsomest man in England." According to the vulgar proverb, "handsome is that handsome does." Sir Arthur Buller, though so fitted to shine in a ball-room, or "caper nimbly in a lady's chamber," has shown himself possessed of powers adapted for higher purposes. When on the Bench at Calcutta he was considered a first-rate criminal lawyer, and now that he is going to legislate for British India we trust that he will be of good service to the State, and advance his own reputation as a public man.

The Home Government has required that whenever a regimental lieutenant-colonel who has retired under the annuity scheme, and whose name has therefore been retained on the list, shall be removed from that list either by death or by any casualty amongst the colonels, the fact of such removal and the occasion of it may be notified in General Orders. As an instance of the economical tendencies influencing the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras army, it may be mentioned that the premature condemnation of rifles and other valuable arms has become the subject of a General Order, directing that all rifles condemned by station committees shall be sent to the grand arsenal for inspection and closer scrutiny.

The Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Bank, lately formed in London with a capital of a million sterling, was expected to commence business in Kurrachee immediately.

We noticed in our editorial column some numbers back the case of the mutinous native students of the Calcutta Medical College, when so many students seceded in a body because one of them had been taken before the police and punished for abstracting medicines from the dispensing department. The matter was submitted to the Director of Public Instruction, who has since very quietly rebuked the students for their folly, and given them permission to return to the College. They are let off, perhaps, a little too easily, for native students, are but too ready to perplex their immediate superiors by withdrawing in a body as often as they fancy that even one fellow-student has been aggrieved. The disgrace of one of their number is always supposed by them to be shared by the whole body.

The Khoonds of the hill tracts of Orissa are still wretched savages, in spite of their proximity to more civilized races. The British Government has done all it could, in the way of friendly intervention, to put a stop to their human sacrifices, and the murder of aged parents; but these practices, though partially checked, still continue, more or less openly. Some British officers were lately sent amongst them to survey the country. The chiefs and priests took the alarm. They regarded it as the first step towards the annexation of their country, and the destruction of their religion. The British officers called a great meeting of the chiefs, at which it was explained that the survey was intended for the benefit of their country, and the British were their friends and well-wishers. The chiefs were soothed and flattered, and they finally consented to the survey of the country.

The applications for admission to the Staff Corps continue, as will be seen by reference to our Official Gazette (Bengal), to be very numerous.

The Bill to create a municipal corporation for Calcutta has been referred to the consideration of a Select Committee. The Bill is under the auspices of the Hon. Ashley Eden. It proposes to entrust justices of the peace, selected by Government among the ratepayers, with the control of the municipal administration of the town. The Lieutenant-governor reserves to himself the right to select from the body of justices a chairman of the corporation, with a salary of Rs. 3,000.

Mr. Farrell, the engineer, has commenced with great vigour on the new Ceylon Railway. He has procured labourers and bullocks from Bombay.

Colonel Halden, commanding the corps of Royal Engineers stationed at Ceylon, has been suspended by order of the Major-general. The cause of this proceeding has not yet been made known.

We have mentioned before that the 10th of March was kept as a general holiday at Madras, but the Government of Ceylon seems to be not very demonstrative in its loyalty. It is said that the Colonial Secretary searched the official records for a precedent, and finding none to the purpose decided that there should be no public rejoicings on the occasion.

At a meeting of the Calcutta Auction Company it was resolved, after a long discussion, that "the affairs of the company be wound up." Mr. Yule, the present acting manager, was appointed to act as liquidator on a salary of Rs. 500.

FLAX.—We are sorry to learn from a very recent Government Record (Feb. 28), "that the experiment of growing flax on the Neilgherries and in Wynaud, so far as it has yet been tried, has been unsuccessful."—Several competent parties who have engaged in the cultivation of the plant, furnish a bad account of the result.—Madras Athenæum, March 5.

BENGAL.

THE LITTLE WAR IN THE EASTERN HILLS.

Official telegrams have, during the last few weeks, occasionally apprised the public of the capture of stockades and rebel leaders with unpronounceable names, in the Cossyah and Jynteah hills. These announcements of the results of the small war we are waging have more or less excited the curiosity of a tax-paying community to know what is really going on, and this we now propose to gratify by describing the late occurrences and present position of affairs in that part of our empire.

The flattering hopes raised by General Showers' account of his military promenade through the hills, in the early part of last year, and his sanguine report to Government of the complete pacification of the country, were rudely dispelled in September last, by the refusal of the hill chiefs to attend at the Lieutenant-Governor's durbar, and by the subsequent general rising of the tribes. At the close of the rainy season the 33rd N.I., dispersed in posts over the hills and prostrated by sickness, were unable to move out of their defences. The 44th Regiment, a corps chiefly composed of Ghoorkas and hill men, and a detachment of the 28th Punjab Infantry alone held in check the rebels, who were daily increasing in numbers and audacity. At this juncture affairs looked so serious that Government were at last aroused to believe in the reports of the local officers, and in November the 21st Punjab Infantry, a mountain train battery, and Rattray's Sikhs, were ordered to the hills, where Colonel Dunsford, C.B., had been appointed to the command of the troops to be employed. Collecting troops and supplies in a hostile country, where coolies are the only means of carriage, is tedious work, and it was not till New Year's Day that the 33rd N.I., utterly unfitted by sickness for any hard service, were deported safely from the hills, and the offensive was actively assumed.

On the 2nd of January the rebel stockades of Non Barai and Oomkoi were assaulted and taken. The stockades were found to be formidable, and if courageously defended would doubtless have entailed considerable loss in their capture; they consisted of a wall some sixteen feet high, composed of massive trunks of trees, which were firmly imbedded in a five feet parapet of rocks and earth. Such a work, bristling with a chevaux de frise of pointed bamboos, and surrounded by an abattis, was unbreachable by any but siege train guns, and could only be entered by escalade. Bullets, arrows, rocks, stones, and spears were freely used by the defenders; but the entrance of the first man was the signal for their flight, and as the stockades were always constructed with a good line of retreat into impenetrable jungle, the loss suffered by them was doubtless small, and was chiefly caused by the vertical fire from the howitzers previous to the assault. Fighting from behind such a defence the rebels were in comparative safety from either the bayonets or bullets of our soldiers, who at the moment of victory were balked of the fruits of their work, by the escape of the enemy. On the 4th January the stockade of Oomkoi, a rather more formidable work was in like manner carried by storm. It was here that Colonel Richardson, whose experiences of Kossyah fighting were so invaluable, was severely wounded. The capture of these three stockades may be said to have ended the campaign in the Southern hills; the rebels were scattered, and the troops were for the next ten days employed in hunting them out of the deep valleys where they had taken refuge. During the latter part of January, the southern districts having been effectually cleared, posts of occupation were established, and the scene of operations was shifted to the northern part of the country. Here no stockades had been constructed, the rebels having apparently trusted to the nature of their fastnesses to protect them from invasion, where thick forests and precipitous ravines seemed almost to warrant the belief in their inaccessibility. The movement of any massed body of troops in such a country being alike impracticable and useless, detachments were pushed forward, which, spreading out in every direction, left no means untried of harassing the rebels. The hardy Punjabees and active Ghoorkas, making light of all difficulties, burned and plundered the rebel villages, discovered and confiscated their hidden stores of grain, and captured or killed the rebels themselves, in places where they least expected an enemy to penetrate.

These active measures are now bearing fruit, and once more we are beginning to hope the rebellion may be coming to an end. Many hundreds have already tendered their submission, and by this time the remainder have, we may confidently anticipate, surrendered. The lesson thus for the first time thoroughly taught to these unruly mountaineers has been bitter and sharp; we trust that it may be as lasting. But such is the difficulty of governing utter savages that it is impossible to predict quiet for any length of time, and an ill-judged order or a tyrannical official may cause the events of this cold weather to be repeated in the next; but we have good faith in Colonel Haughton's energy and judgment, and sincerely hope that the exertions of our troops may at last have impressed upon the Cossyah mind the futility of either defying or attempting to escape from the British authority. The great difficulty experienced by the civil officers in dealing with these tribes is that of communication with them. Not an official in the hills can speak the language (Cossyah) sufficiently well to be able to do without an interpreter, and as there is no written Cossyah character it is impossible to publish effectually the terms of surrender, or any proclamation Government may wish to make to the people. In fact, we are in the hands of the interpreters, who are liberally paid for their services, and whose pecuniary interest it is to prolong the rebellion indefinitely, for on its close the profits now reaped by them will be brought to an end. It does not seem to be generally known that for years we have been trying to govern these poor people without knowing their language—an impossible feat. It is far different on the Peshawar frontier, where Major James, the late Captain Henderson, Colonel Vaughan, and many other officers, have a perfect colloquial command of the various dialects of Pushtoo, which can hardly be easier of acquisition than Cossyah.

Should this rebellion break out again, we protest against any but Punjab or Ghoorka regiments being employed. Hindustanis are worse than useless. To the 33rd N.I. (Allahabad Levy) some of the civil authorities attribute the duration of the present outbreak. They cannot stand the climate or the hard work; they absolutely run from the hill men, and make the Cossyahs think themselves pluckier soldiers than the Sahib-log's soldiers are. The Sikhs and Ghoorkas do the work admirably. The estimation in which the Cossyah holds the regiments may be gathered from the following table of rewards offered by O. Kiang Nongbah, which is authentic:—For the head of a European officer, Rs. 100; of a "red papi" soldier, i.e., 21st or 28th P.I. man, Rs. 50; of a 44th N.I. man, Rs. 40; and of a 33rd N.I. man, Rs. 7. There should always be at least two native regiments in these hills; Europeans could not be supplied but at an immense expenditure, and there is no object in sending them there. The foe is contemptible, and with twenty Sikhs a Punjab officer would undertake to defy and scatter any number of Cossyahs.—Friend of India, March 5.

SIR CHARLES JACKSON.

If there be one order of men of whose pre-eminence over those of all other countries England may be justly proud it is that of her judges. The few exceptions who have sullied the ermine by party spirit, prejudice or injustice, are spoken of by their countrymen with abhorrence, and even the worst of them, Jeffreys himself, would find a dozen parallels at this very hour in most countries. Cross-questioning and bullying a prisoner is a matter of course in France, subservience to Government is almost universal on the Continent, but uprightness, independence, and a single eye to what is right, are so universal on our English bench that we look upon them as a matter of course, and while we find fault with the most trifling defects in our judges, and dwell upon the slightest departure from official dignity, or the least exhibition of infirmity of temper, we never think of praising our judges until we lose them. If Sir Mordaunt Wells were going away it might then strike us with amazement that he should have habitually worked fourteen hours a day, and that not at mere desk like a secretary, but at business engrossing every faculty of the heart and conscience as well as mind, requiring, in fact, the energies of the whole man, and with such success that, although in six months he has decided upwards of one hundred and fifty cases involving property to the amount of thirty-six lakhs of rupees, there has not been a single appeal against his decisions. The fact is that every member of council or judge from England is looked upon by Calcutta society as an interloper. The civilian and official spirit so peculiar to Bengal, and so hostile to all who do not belong to their own little clique, makes the self-styled leaders of society view with spiteful criticism any new arrival of high position. They find fault with himself and his wife, with his dinners, his manners, his appearance, his dress, and everything belonging to him. After a time the assailants are driven first from one point of attack and then from another, and after a seven years' probation the distinguished interloper is condescendingly acknowledged, and receives the respect due to a Calcutta civilian.

Sir C. Jackson has long passed through this purgatorial period, and left India on Monday last without an enemy, or an assailant. By far the oldest occupant of the judicial bench in Calcutta, his name has long been familiar to the community. Society changes so quickly that the majority of the present residents can hardly recall the time when Sir Charles Jackson landed, in 1849, as Advocate-general of Bengal. The circumstances under which he arrived were such as to evoke some jealousy. It may well be regarded as beyond the limits of ordinary fairness studiously to withhold from the local bar the prospect of elevation to the bench, more particularly as the administration of justice in India is daily becoming, under the influence of recent changes, as well as by virtue of so many different codes and tenures, a speciality. But the post of Advocate-general of Bengal seems to be a prize especially marked out as the property of the bar practicing in Calcutta, and Sir Charles Jackson's importation from abroad was not readily acquiesced in by those concerned. He very soon outlived prejudices of this kind. After some years' service as Advocate-general he was appointed Puisne Judge at Bombay, but returned to Calcutta in 1855. His fine temper, his unspotted integrity and impartiality, his thorough honesty and conscientiousness, were always worthy of his high position. His private life was as stainless as his public character. Courteous, kindly, and actively benevolent, he won the esteem and respect of all.

During his five years' membership of the Legislative Council, he showed a noble independence, alike of Government and of popular clamour at home, by manfully supporting the Chief Justice in opposing those invasions of British rights, the Black Acts, the Arms Bill, and the uncontrolled power of the Governor-general to proclaim law in the non-regulation provinces. At the same time his voice was always heard when he thought there was good reason to defend the peasant against oppression, but a false philanthropy did not run away with his judgment, for he protested against the passing of the Rent Law of 1859. In common with all the judges he yet stood like a man in the van of his countrymen, and strove against irresponsible despotism, against the cant of quality between Europeans and natives, against depriving Englishmen of their birthright by subjecting them to heathen magistrates. They all alike brought down upon themselves the glorious disgrace of being extruded from the Legislative Council, and of being treated with marked discourtesy and ingratitude by the Supreme Government. They refused to make themselves the tool of a despotic Secretary of State. Their intimate knowledge of the inherent difference, not so much of race as of religion, and, consequently, of conscience and conscientiousness, between an Englishman and a Mussulman, or a Hindoo, made them resist, as one man, the attempt to place the Christian in the power of the heathen.

They who deny the very existence of sin, or who declare that God is the author of it, and they who look upon slaying and spoiling unbelievers (in the Koran) as the most efficacious atonement for their own misdeeds, cannot possibly make conscientious and upright judges. We need some to reiterate these truths authoritatively in England, and on this account alone we rejoice at the departure of Sir Charles Jackson. While wishing him many years of happiness in the bosom of his family, we entreat him to exert all his influence to increase the number of thoroughly-trained Christian judges who will "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with their God" as he himself has done.—Friend of India.

DISTRIBUTION OF SCHOOL PRIZES AT LAHORE BY SIR R. MONTGOMERY.

The special train from Unrisur on the 23rd Feb. brought over at an early hour hundreds of school boys from the city and its vicinity, as well as numbers of the chiefs and citizens, altogether aggregating close upon a thousand. They were received by our native municipality at the railway station, and conveyed like the others from Goojanwala and Ferozepore, who had arrived the previous evening, to Lalla Ratan Chund's Serai, where the whole were bountifully regaled. By half-past eleven all had assembled at the Huzoree Bagh, where they were joined by the Commissioner and other civil authorities, and the procession then defiled through the Roshnee Gate, and moved towards the Durbar tents standing on the plain front of the Fort and Badami Bagh.

The extent of canvas stretched over this spot was immense. The resources of the city had evidently been useful in furnishing many Shiamanahs in addition to the Government camp equipage. Still, when the chiefs had taken their seats and the schools began to file in, it was only by the closest packing that accommodation could be secured for all present.

At half past twelve the English visitors began to pour in rapidly, and while the Anarkullee band, which was posted near the entrance, enlivened the crowds thronging round the outer ring, which was carefully kept by the police, the visitors and scholars within the tents were amusing themselves with examining the medals, books, and other articles intended for prizes, which were ranged on tables covered with exquisite Cashmere shawls to the right and left front of the chair of State. Beyond them, again, stood several other tables covered with philosophical apparatus. On one side was seen a miniature locomotive, spinning along its Lilliputian circular railway, and puffing out its steam most vigorously, while in the middle of its gyrations stood the model of a high pressure stationary engine, with the driving wheel flying round like lightning. Alongside was some queer looking hydrostatic apparatus, which seemed prepared to furnish shower baths gratis, at the shortest notice. In the centre were fountains of divers forms, set playing by the action of highly compressed air. On the left stood a powerful electrical machine and a smaller galvanic battery with various appliances, for ringing bells, emitting sparks, and shocking the nerves of the by-standers generally. Behind these again came an air-pump, which disclosed all the wonders of atmospheric pressure on a vacuum, by forcing mercury through solid wood, winding metal cups together with gigantic strength, and such like magic operations. These experiments were viewed with intense delight by the native portion of the assembly, both young and old, and some were not without interest for the English visitors, and especially for the children.

At one P.M. his honour the Lieut.-governor, attended by his Private Secretary and A.D.C., drew up in a carriage and four to the grand entrance, escorted by a detachment of that crack corps—the Cavalry of the Guides, which he delights to honour as his body guard. As he alighted, the heavy guns on the ramparts of the fort boomed forth a noisy welcome, the guard of honour, formed by Dorn's Punjabee Zouaves, gave a smart salute, and with the strains of the National Anthem swelling through the air, Sir Robert Montgomery, accompanied by his Civil and Military Secretaries, the Major-general Commanding the Lahore Division, the Judicial and other Commissioners, the Director of Public Instruction, and other chiefs of departments, advanced up the centre of the throng to his seat at the head of the Durbar.

As soon as the Director had finished his remarks to the native portion of the audience and retired, his honour the Lieut.-Governor rose, and turning to the English visitors, spoke the following words with admirable clearness and emphasis, which seemed to rivet the attention of all:—

"Captain Fuller, the Director of Public Instruction, has read a most interesting report, for which my acknowledgments are due to him. He has assembled the pupils of the Government schools in and around Lahore and has asked me to distribute the annual prizes. I have readily assented, and we have here to day the novel and delightful spectacle of upwards of 1,000 children, the sons of the nobility and middle classes congregated together at this capital, not as their fathers used to be for aggression or strife; but rivals for distinction in literature and science.

"Many here present are personal witnesses of the history of the Punjab during the past fifteen years. When we call to mind its position in 1848 and the few preceding years, the fearful struggle for dominion that took place, and the anarchy and confusion that prevailed, and then contemplate as we have each year since done, the growing peace and prosperity of the Province, may we not indeed exclaim, What has not God done for us!

"Another fifteen years, and what progress with God's blessing will there not be. Whoever lives till then will see the intelligent and hardy sons of the Punjab, whose fathers proved themselves to be the most worthy foemen of Britain's best soldiers, taking as high a position in learning and intelligence as they did in war.

"It is very gratifying to me, as I feel it is to you all, to see before us 150 of the sons of the aristocracy preparing themselves for their future important spheres. It is in working through the higher classes that we must look for the rapid advancement and prosperity of the people. It is our special duty to educate the higher classes and then the education of the mass will follow. I want to see them take a high place in the administration of the country, and fill important offices in the State. The experiment already made of investing the chiefs and citizens with extensive powers far exceeds all that I had anticipated.

"There is a zeal and an earnestness, and an interest and an energy about them, regarding which there can be no mistake, no manner of doubt. I hope to see their numbers increasing annually, and their sons now present in due time taking the place of their fathers, with advantages which these did not possess. The past is full of encouragement, and the many earnest officers this Province possesses is the sure pledge, under God, of future success.

"There is a strong feeling that efforts should be made towards female education. In due course it will, I believe, follow the education of the other sex. But to be rapidly successful, it must commence with the higher orders. They will not send their children to schools, as some advocate. But I believe many are prepared to begin to educate their daughters at home, and much may be done by our procuring them suitable teachers, and supplying them with books.

"I will take the opportunity of alluding to the subject when I address the chiefs and their sons, which I propose now to do, and I will ask them for their co-operation and example in the cause of female education."

His honour then turned to the Sirdars on his right, and though we were unable to catch all he said distinctly, we have been assured that the subjoined translation aptly represents the purport of his remarks to them:—

"Chiefs and Gentlemen,—I am glad to see you here this day to witness the distribution of prizes to the pupils of the schools in and around Lahore. By sending your sons to the Lahore High School you have set a good example to others.

"Several of your sons have succeeded in entering the Calcutta University. This success will excite others to learning. It is my earnest desire to see your sons take as high a place in learning as you yourselves did in war; learning does not unfit a man for being a soldier. The British officer is educated, and you know that he can fight. Should your services be ever required in war, the Government would much prefer an educated to an uneducated man. Although our Government is always prepared for war, yet our earnest desire is peace, and that all should be happy and contented.

"I want to see your sons take a part in the administration of the country. It is to you I especially look for aid. The mass of the people will follow your examples. I want you to aid me in one thing. It is a matter in which I myself and others have a great interest, and that is to introduce and extend female education. If you will educate your daughters, then the multitude will follow you.

"Men and women are equal in understanding. They share each other's joys and sorrows. In Europe both men and women are educated, and they enjoy great happiness. I grieve that women are not now educated in Hindustan. In former times women of rank were educated.

"What a day will that be when the chiefs and gentlemen of the Punjab begin to educate their daughters.

"Think over the matter, consider it well, and let me know how I can help you, and I will do so."

Several of the native chiefs, all of whom stood up during the Lieut.-Governor's address to them, uttered a few words in reply on its conclusion. Among them we particularly noticed a fine old man with snowy beard, the nestor of the assembly, Diwan Ajoodhia Purshad, who promised, on behalf of the upper classes at Lahore, that a committee should be formed for the consideration of the important question of female education which his honour had commended to their notice, and that the result of their deliberation, with proposals for its promotion, should be laid before Government at the earliest date.—Lahore Chronicle.

THE RAJAH OF KUPURTALLAH.

JULLUNDHUR, Feb. 25.—As I have a spare hour or two before the dak gharry arrives, I cannot employ it better than by giving you a line, recording the proceedings of Jullundhur and neighbourhood. For the past two or three days the station has been enjoying a holiday, celebrating the marriage of the daughter of the Rajah of Kupurtallah. Like all native marriages it has taken some time to celebrate, but the part I have witnessed comprises two days, the 23rd and 24th. The Rajah gave invitations to most in the station, and on the morning of the 23rd all turned out. From six A.M. to nine A.M. the road leading to Kapurtallah was well sprinkled with conveyances, from six in hand to the plain gharry, and from thorough bred to hill ponies. The Commissioner, Colonel Lake, accompanied by Brigadier Bishop, arrived about nine A.M., and was received with a salute of eleven guns. Captain Elphinstone, deputy commissioner, came up about 9.30 A.M., and in another hour most of the guests had arrived. At 11 they sat down to a capital breakfast, and having done justice to the Rajah's good cheer, each one went and enjoyed himself or herself as they felt most inclined. Billiards, the garden of the palace, and the excellent library, were sufficient to make the day pass quickly, to say nothing of the auxiliary of a capital tiffin, with Simpkin ad libitum. The fireworks commenced at 7 P.M. and continued without intermission until 8.30, or thereabout. They certainly did great credit to the projector. The ball commenced at 9, and I should imagine from eighty to one hundred were there. The ladies, as they always do, looked charming, and the Princess of Kupurtallah evidently enjoyed herself while trying to make her English friends do the same. Supper was announced about 11 P.M., and after that dancing was renewed, and kept up until (as the phrase is) an early hour in the morning. So terminated the first day's proceedings. After breakfast on the 24th Col. Lake, Brigadier Bishop, and Captain Elphinstone proceeded to examine the school founded and supported by the Rajah. About two hundred pupils are upon the books and about thirty are learning English. Too high praise cannot be bestowed upon the Rev. Mr. Bloomfield and Dr. Newton, the superintendents, who have evidently got their hearts in the work. The different classes were examined in Persian, and showed the evidences of good tuition. The English classes, especially, have made great progress in history and geography, and about eighty of the students came well off under a rather severe examination in mathematics and geometry. After the examination, Colonel Lake presented the prizes to the most deserving,—atlases, dictionaries and histories, and even a copy of Milton to a lad who has shown a poetical turn. Most of the scholars got one or two rupees, not so much for their present proficiency, but as an incentive to greater efforts. The pupils were then addressed by Colonel Lake in a simple and clear speech, in which he pointed out to them the great advantages of education in their own language, and also in English, and impressing upon them how much they owed to his Highness the Rajah, in placing a school within their reach in which they could have the advantage of English tuition. The Rajah and Dr. Bloomfield next addressed them, giving each words of kindly encouragement, and striving to rouse them to renewed application. The party then proceeded to the old palace to see the dowry of the bride. The road was crowded with visitors from all parts of the Punjab, and the "house tops" were swarming with faces. While passing the Rajah was saluted in terms the most flattering, and evidently with a good deal of sincerity. Before entering the great hall we passed through a line of camels and horses, part of the marriage settlement. In the hall lay the money dowry—one lac and twenty-two thousand rupees—spread out in flat baskets. On the centre of this, on a very rich salver, lay the jewels and other adornments of the bride. I am not much of a judge of jewellery, but the pearls and diamonds looked well. Outside of this, and covering a large space, were displayed the dresses of the bride. Shades of Howell and James! I am afraid you could not make such a display. False "about nothing to wear." Here lay 250 dresses, made up of the richest materials, and many of them with valuable jewels upon them. I only wish the lady may live long enough to wear them, and have good health in doing so. The scene in the compound was one I shall not soon forget. To give any idea of the numbers would be hopeless; the most prominent in the native assembly was our old friend Mohun Lall, once writer to Sir Alexander Burns, in Cabool, and better known by the work he wrote when in England, and the notice he received from royalty. The commander-in-chief, brother of the Rajah, and the prime minister, together with the high priest of the Sikhs, the gooroo or high priest from Umritsur, were in attendance; also burra wallahs from Umritsur and Lahore, in great numbers. The crowd, noise, and gorgeous display, was truly Oriental. India could only produce such a scene, and few in India could even do this.

The next visit was to the Persian library, where are to be seen some of the oldest Persian manuscripts—copies of the "Dewan Hafis," written in Persia about the year 1200, and of the "Goolistan," written about the same date. These two copies are, I believe, the only ones in India. A ramble through the gardens, and then fireworks in the evening, superior, if anything, to the previous day's, next followed. About 10 P.M., rather a late hour, the whole of the guests sat down to dinner. After the cloth had been removed, Colonel Lake rose, and in a manly and telling speech, proposed the health of the Rajah. He said that he and the others met him now as a host, of whose generous and princely hospitality they had such evidence; but this was not what made him respect the Rajah only, he did so for those virtues and sterling qualities that shone forth so nobly in the hour of our need. In May, 1857, when mutiny broke out and rolled over the land like a destroying cloud, he was then our true and firm ally, who threw in his lot with us for good or bad, and it gave him great pleasure now to revert to these things after the sad trial was past. The Rajah replied in a short speech, in which he acknowledged the many kindnesses received from Colonel Lake, and said that his advice had guided him then, as it had often before and since done. A good deal more was said which might be rather irrelevant here, but the evening was heartily spent, and I think every one enjoyed themselves. So ended the part of the Kupurtallah feast I had the good fortune to be a witness of, and certainly I think many went away with very different feelings to those with which they arrived. They had experienced such hospitality as it does not fall to the lot of mankind in general to be able to dispense, and it was given in that quiet unostentatious manner which in all cases makes it the more appreciated.

When driving home I inquired of a gentleman well acquainted with the district, whether the Government had done anything to record their sense of the rajah's services, and was very much surprised to find nothing had been done. To take a glance back, it might be well to recal what were the services rendered by the Rajah as an independent prince. In May 1857, when the mutiny broke out at Meerut, and the followers of the "green banner of Islam" predicted the sudden extinction of the Feringhees, he marched his contingent to Jullundhur and held the sepoys in check. When at last, in July, they broke out in open rebellion, he held the city, and by his influence saved it from plunder, and guarded forty lacs of treasure then in hand; and what is of far greater importance, he saved the lives of Europeans. It is not too much to say that, if it had not been for the Rajah of Kupurtallah, there might have been a massacre such as stains "Cawnpore the accursed." But, after having prevented the city from being plundered, he marched in pursuit of the rebels to the Sutlej, and preserved quiet in the district. After this he furnished a contingent of two thousand for the siege of Delhi, and marched at the head of another contingent of five thousand men and twelve guns to Oude, where he assisted in the capture of Lucknow, and subsequently served under Lord Clyde in the latter operations. When the thick of the fight was over, he placed his troops at the disposal of the civil power to restore law and order in the district. Such have been the services of Kupurtallah, and well does he merit the highest honours England can confer upon a native prince of India. Is not this man as worthy of the Star of India as the Begum of Bhopal or as the Nizam of Hyderabad? Let Government see to it, and satisfy themselves as to the claims of the Rajah to honour and reward. If they refer to the officers of the Punjab, I think the verdict will be favourable to Kupurtallah. Reward him before it is too late, so that he can appreciate and know for what he receives the honour.—Englishman.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DELHI, March 1.—We are expecting the Viceroy on Tuesday, the 3rd, and the station is being brushed up with laudable celerity in consequence. Every public building capable of improvement by the process has been whitewashed, or red-washed, and the earthworks round the fortress, and round the newly-planted trees on the Esplanade have been progressing during the last week in a most astonishing manner; so that if we get nought else we shall be very thankful for his Excellency's visit. But I am forgetting the Lieutenant-governor altogether, and it is doubtless for him also that great exertions are made. His Honour has been here some days, and has visited every hole and corner of the city. He has inspected old and new barracks, new roads, old buildings, streets and lanes, with a view to improvements, and I hope they will be speedily carried out. The very day his honour arrived he held a reception for Europeans, and a durbar at 3 p.m. for the natives. Both were attended as well as they could be upon short notice; but the durbar was a very scrubby affair, as, with the exception of a few bankers and bunnecahs, there were no native gentry to present. But those who were presented were doubtless highly delighted with the affability of our good Lieutenant-governor, and if they were not they ought to have been. The next day his Honour signified his wish to see, and make the personal acquaintance of, the new Municipal Commissioners, who duly availed themselves of the summons. They were most cordially received and made acquainted with the duties expected from them, with many valuable suggestions from his Honour and the secretary to the Punjab Government, Mr. Forsyth. Several projected improvements were noticed, and their feasibility discussed, and by four p.m. his Honour rose to depart. Before doing so he touched upon the choongee tax, and inquired into its working. The replies were satisfactory, and no wonder they were so, seeing that most of the native gentlemen present were in a measure peculiarly interested in the matter; however, I suppose it is "all right." I believe it was proposed that the Viceroy should enter by the Delhi Gate, proceed down the new Esplanade, up the Chandney Chowk, lined with troops, and out of the Lahore Gate to his camp. But the programme is now for his Excellency to be met on the Kootub road, about a mile from the Lahore Gate, by the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab, the Brigadier, and staff, when the procession will form, and, entering by the Lahore Gate of the city, proceed down the Chandney Chowk through the Cashmere Gate to his Excellency's camp, wherever it is to be pitched, either at the Cabul Gate (the old parade ground) or in the cantonments. I think I pointed out some time ago the probable inconvenience of any large camp pitching where it was customary in former days to do so. The ground has been sold for building to some favoured individuals, and the want of a good large encamping ground is now much felt. But as railway extension progresses, I suppose the want of large camps at all will become less; so that the present inconvenience can be overlooked. I believe it was at one time proposed to post the new municipal commissioners at the Lahore Gate of the city, to be introduced to the Viceroy by the Lieutenant-governor, and to join the procession; but as the municipal body are not adroit equestrians, they did not seem to see the fun of this addition to the tomasha. It was also proposed to illuminate the city one night during his Excellency's stay, but this was very properly overruled, and now I believe the throng with his Excellency will be the only exhibition, and enough, too, in all conscience. The troops will, of course, be all out, and these, with what are in his Excellency's camp, are enough of themselves to make a tolerable display. The rifles have come into their quarters from camp. I suppose we shall hear their fine strong band some evening soon. The weather is warm during the day; the nights and early mornings still cool. Highway robberies are becoming more frequent than pleasant, but they are beyond the walls of the city, and are only a sign of the Goojurs regaining confidence. March 3.—The Viceroy and Governor-general of India made his entry into Delhi this morning. Yesterday his honour the Lieutenant-governor, and Brigadier Lord Mark Kerr, c.b., with several of the leading members of both services in Delhi, went out to the Kootub, where Lord Elgin's camp was pitched, and where there was ample amusement in the shape of sight-seeing for the whole day. The camp began to arrive about 11 a.m., and by evening the tents were pitched on the old parade ground, just outside the Cabul gate of the city; but by some oversight the camp was not pitched with an eye to the picturesque, or if so, it was a crooked or squinting eye. However, there it is, and as the halt is only for a couple of days, it will not much signify. At an early hour this morning the usual signs of some extraordinary event "cast their shadows before" in the shape of staff officers "in full fig" galloping hither and thither, and the city police, looking cleaner than usual, ranged at intervals on either side of the streets through which the cortege was to pass. The 2nd Battalion, Rifle Brigade, proceeded to the Delhi Gate-street, preceded by a troop of the 1st (Skinner's) Bengal Cavalry, under Captain Digby Compton, and Gray's Battery of Artillery, with the wing of the 4th N. I. under Colonel Liptrot, took up their position at the side of the Chandney Chowk, facing the esplanade, and exactly opposite the Lahore-gate of the palace. The streets were well watered, and the police kept the ground very well, considering the persevering efforts of the crowd to get as much as possible into places where they had no right to be. A little after eight a.m. the first gun of the royal salute, fired from the 24-pounders on the Lahore-gate bastion, (close under the spot where poor Mr. Fraser, Captain Douglas, Mr. Jennings and the ill-fated young ladies were murdered), announced the approach of the head of the procession, a squadron of the 8th Hussars, piloted by one of "Skinner's Horse." These were followed by the troop of "Skinner's Horse," 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade, the Rifles forming the escort, the body-guard; and then came his Excellency, surrounded by a brilliant staff, and accompanied by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and staff, the Municipal Commissioners, the Commissioner of Delhi, and several other civilians who had trusted themselves outside horses for the occasion. This part of the procession might have been more numerous, but the close proximity of the guns and the novelty of the scene led many gentlemen to prefer their own legs; and if less conspicuous they were certainly more safe. As the procession passed it was joined by the artillery and 4th Native Infantry, so that at the close it could not have been less than a mile in length. It was a most imposing sight, and viewed from the Chandney Chowk end of the Esplanade could not have presented a prettier picture. It was half past nine before the guns at his Excellency's camp announced the fact of the Viceroy having reached it; and although only the 3rd of March, there can be but little doubt about all having been very glad to get under cover and out of "harassment." At one p.m. his Excellency will hold a levee, which will, I know, be very well attended. I have not heard anything else as yet about what is to be done, but I suppose the few eligible bunnecahs will be received in "darbar,"—or at least have the honour of sitting inside the darbar tent, an honour very few of them expected in September 1857. The weather has suddenly become very hot, and especially oppressive in tents, but with the roads well watered, and the prospect of rain about the end of this month, or the beginning of next, I hope we shall have a season, hitherto like it, similar to that of 1857, at least as far as the temperature is concerned. It will be good news to you, and is a most gratifying proof of "progress," to know that your paper of the 27th ultimo reached Delhi and was delivered on the afternoon of the 2nd instant. As I can easily remember the time when the same distance was not accomplished under nine or ten days, it is pleasant to find only three now occupied.—Englishman.

RAILWAY COMMUNICATION WITH THE NORTH-WEST.—Below will be found a letter from Rajpootana, in which the desirableness of extending the line of railway, now open as far as Ahmedabad, is forcibly dwelt upon. The writer remarks, that unless Bombay makes a strong effort to prevent it, the traffic and commerce of the North-West will be diverted from its natural outlet, to find a circuitous route via Calcutta. Such a diversion will be to be regretted. It is folly for us to talk of our geographical position, and the advantages which Bombay possesses, and passively to allow Eastern India to carry from us a trade which rightly belongs to the Western Presidency. Our progress only demonstrates what Bombay may be made by—energy in her people. We should be glad to know why the scheme of extending the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India line, from Ahmedabad to Deesa, and from Deesa to Delhi, has come to an untimely end? The country presents literally no engineering obstacles, while it teems with produce, which would be indefinitely increased were there facilities of carriage for it to the coast. The great cities of Delhi, Ajmere, Pallee, Bhawanee, Rewarree, Goorgoon, Joudpoor, have no means of communication with each other or with Ahmedabad, excepting the bullock-cart and the camel, which crawl at a pace which renders the transit costly in the extreme. On the great routes through the countries we have named, vast trains of produce may nevertheless be met. Wool, cotton, opium, soda, even now find their way towards the coast, and an easy transit would increase the quantity to an untold extent. Our Marwarree fellow-citizens know well what their country might become, if aided by railway extension. The matter is one of competition between Bombay and Calcutta. One or the other will eventually absorb this commerce. Calcutta has the start of us in the extension of her line towards Delhi and Lahore, but Bombay has all the advantage in point of position. As our correspondent observes, every trader and merchant in Bombay is interested in the extension of the railway from Ahmedabad onwards, "guarantee or no guarantee." "To the Editor of the Times of India.—Sir,—Sir Bartle Frere was transferred from Seinde to Calcutta to be 'imperialised'; he has now returned to Bombay to be localised. This remark is penned regarding the head of the Bombay Government, as it has now become evident that the extension of the railway from Ahmedabad northwards, to its proper terminus at Delhi, has ceased; but although Sir Bartle Frere may halt on his onward path, the press of India, ever watchful of the interests of all classes over which it exercises influence, must stand as mentor, and point the road to progress, and urge on him and his colleagues the necessity for action in this weighty matter. Bombay justly aspires to be the mart of India. Does the energy of its merchants flag after the wondrous prosperity of 1862? Already their brethren in Calcutta are aware that Bombay will eventually absorb the traffic of the populous territories of our North Western Provinces; have commenced to agitate for extension lines from Delhi southwards to Goorgoon, Rewarree, Bhawanee, and Jeypoor; and it is high time for the mercantile classes of Western India to bestir themselves, and prevent the prizes of the Empire from slipping from their grasp. Every trader and merchant in Bombay is interested in the completion of this line of railway, guarantee or no guarantee. Let them refer to their Marwarree neighbours for information regarding the importance of the towns mentioned above as emporiums of commerce, and reflect on the facilities that will be opened to trade by the prosecution of this great industrial enterprise to its legitimate end, which will complete the series of trunk lines, and in itself does not offer a single engineering difficulty throughout its whole length, and the inauguration of which will eventuate in Bombay becoming the Venice of the East, and the Imperial port of our boundless Eastern empire.—Huq. Rajpootana, Feb. 23."—Times of India.

HIGHWAY ROBBERS BETWEEN ALLAHABAD AND DELHI.—We are sorry to say that the road between Allahabad and Benares has been rendered unsafe lately by the presence of European soldiers, who have evidently found their way from Benares cantonments. On Monday night last week two parties from this station were proceeding by dawk; the first was a gentleman travelling alone. When about two stages on this side of Benares, and about midnight, he was awakened by a sudden jerk of the carriage, and the voice of the coachman. On opening the doors, he was accosted by an European in a civilian's dress, who told him that he intended to travel in that carriage, and insisted upon having a seat or he would stop its further progress. The traveller had not provided himself with his pistols. At some distance ahead, three other men could be seen. The traveller asked him if he belonged to those in front; he said no; and being asked again rather unexpectedly to what regiment he belonged, answered the 104th. After a lengthened colloquy, and finding that the man could not be shaken off peaceably, the traveller ordered the coachman to drive on, and fortunately for him the horse in the carriage was a good one, and went off at once. The soldier made a dash at the carriage, and held on by the back rail. The traveller caught his hand and held it fast, the horse going at a rapid pace. The soldier was thus made to run faster than he wished for some distance when he was let go. The second carriage contained a gentleman and his wife. It appears their carriage was stopping to change horses, when the same man came up to it and accosted the travellers, who were standing by it; in this instance the gentlemen had his revolver at hand, and showed it to the highwayman, who, in return, called him an uncommon, uncivil fellow. The traveller observing two other Europeans sitting near them, walked up to them with revolver in hand, and threatened them, when they all three decamped. These are not the only instances of late. A gentleman who arrived from Benares about the same time had a bag containing notes to the value of two hundred rupees and other valuables stolen out of his carriage while he was inside the dawk bungalow. The circumstance of one of the men, apparently the ring-leader, having mentioned to which regiment he belonged may lead to the discovery of the parties. It should be the endeavour of the military authorities at once to trace the delinquents, as not only the road is rendered unsafe by such proceedings, but the military authorities at Benares are greatly to blame for allowing the men to be out at night so great a distance from cantonment.—Delhi Gazette.

TEA IN HAZARA.—A correspondent writes as follows on the interesting subject of the extension of tea plantations in the Punjab:—"I observe you have had two or three notices regarding the extension of tea in this province. I believe your information has been quite correct, and that Dr. Jameson, Superintendent Royal Botanic Garden at Saharunpoor, is at the present moment engaged in surveying the Kolistan of Hazara, and has selected a central position where about a lakh of plants and several maunds of seed have been put down. From this depot the zumeendars who have expressed great readiness to cultivate will be supplied under the great advantage of their being almost all themselves tea drinkers. There are no waste lands as in the new eastern hill tracts, but every man can cover from two to three acres both profitably and advantageously. The ridges to the north of Jhelum towards Murree are in my opinion peculiarly suited to tea cultivation. The plant must soon find its way into Kashmeer, and would have been acclimated there long since under any other ruler but that of Jumnoo."—Delhi Gazette.

THE "BENTINCK."—We learn from the Englishman that the hospital-ship Bentinck is about to take up her station at the Sand-heads, for the reception of invalids. We agree in thinking the measure will be a success:—"At length, we believe, the hospital-ship Bentinck is to be sent down the river to her station; and it is intended to despatch her within the next few days. No medical officer has, however, as yet been nominated to the vessel, but in other respects she is quite ready for departure. We are sorry to hear that the general impression among the Government officials and departments here, is one of serious doubt as to the success of this interesting experiment; but we would fain believe that, with good management, patience, and a fair trial as regards time, the Bentinck will turn out a useful floating sanatorium; and, in addition to receiving the officers and soldiers of the Government, also attract a considerable amount of patronage from the general public of Calcutta. The ship is really fitted up in the most healthful, commodious, and agreeable manner; and we have every reason to believe that the accessory arrangements as regards the table, and other requisite comforts, will be in keeping with the accommodation. We believe that it is proposed, weather permitting, occasionally to tow the Bentinck to sea for short trips."—Delhi Gazette.

CONVERSION IN BENGAL.—We hail with rejoicing the conversion of Baboo Grish Chunder Dutt, the youngest son of the late Baboo Russomoy Dutt, to Christianity as one of those signs of the times which unmistakably point to a better future. The Baboo, with his wife, a daughter of the second Judge of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, Roy Hurrochund Ghose, was baptised in due form by a minister of the English Church, at their own house at Rambagun, on the evening of Sunday, the 21st Feb. The event is ominous of a great change in the state of the Hindoo society. It will doubtless give a shock to that pernicious system of superstition, the evil effects of which have been felt for centuries in the retarded improvement of a people by nature endowed with capabilities not inferior to those of the most distinguished races of Europe. Hitherto, to the best of our recollection, Hindoo converts to Christianity have, with one exception, been raw stripplings belonging to the poorest ranks of the community, and the defenders of Hindooism have accordingly been enabled with a good show of plausibility to ascribe their apostasy to motives of worldly aggrandisement; but no such motives can be imputed to a person of Baboo Grish Chunder's high social status, advanced age, and mature understanding, and circumstances in life too affluent to admit of any material improvement by the new faith he has espoused. Even the plea "of love" cannot be urged in his case as it was done in the case of Baboo Ganendro Mohun Tagore. When such a man, therefore, in such an age of life, and under such circumstances, voluntarily abandons the religion of his forefathers, a suspicion of the unsoundness of that religion cannot but pass, at least for a moment, through the minds of even the least suspecting; and a large number of such respectable and disinterested instances of deserted Hindooism cannot fail to confirm the suspicions, and shake to its very foundations the baneful supremacy which the Brahmin has held for ages on the minds of a hundred and fifty millions of the human race. We understand from an authentic source that the example of Baboo Grish Chunder Dutt will be speedily followed by his brothers, Baboos Govin and Hurro Chunder Dutt, and his nephews, Baboo Charoo and Hem Chunder Dutt. And, if rumour be correct, another gentleman of great respectability, not connected with the Russomoy family, Baboo Peary Chund Mitra, of the Calcutta Public Library, will also, with all his children, soon embrace the Christian faith. We are not Christians ourselves, but we are anti-Christians neither, and we entertain a very great and sincere respect for all true followers of Christ. If we are not yet convinced of the Divine origin of Christianity, we are quite convinced of its efficacy in promoting the well-being of society, and we shall not, therefore, at all regret if such a religion should supplant the present religion of the Hindoo; religion than which we consider even Mahomedanism to be more rational and less hurtful.—Ryot's Friend.

ASSISTANT-SURGEON R. RHIND, No. 5 Battery, 24th Brigade, R.A., just arrived at the presidency from Assam, is under arrest, pending his trial by general court-martial upon charges arising from a too intimate acquaintance with that eminent vintner, Mr. John Exshaw, of Bordeaux. This is another instance in proof that, although a moderate acquaintance with this gentleman is agreeable, and even in some cases beneficial, too great familiarity is sure to lead officers into danger and trouble.—Englishman.

THE BANK OF BENGAL is gradually extending its operations. Several new branches were recently announced, and we now hear that the Punjab will soon be "annexed" by the monster bank. Branches are to be established, according to popular rumour, at Delhi, Mooltan, and Umrutur, while existing banks at other stations are to be used as agencies of the Government Institution, if willing to undertake the business. The establishment of banks throughout the country should materially affect its commercial prosperity, and we hail them with much satisfaction. There may, however, be too much of a good thing even in the banking line.

MR. GEORGE CAMPBELL.—Mr. George Campbell is the Thackeray of Indian officials. To read his reports, written as judicial commissioner of Oudh, after the verbose phraseology and uniform eulogy in which many other officials think it their duty to indulge, is like reading "Vanity Fair" after the respectable trash which the authoress of "East Lynne" has lately found publishers eager to pay for. Like Thackeray, Mr. Campbell is honest and true to facts in the sense of telling the whole truth; like our modern Montaigne he indulges occasionally in personal allusions which, so far from being impertinent, give point to his remarks; and like both the French and English moralists he has just sufficient scepticism in his nature to lead him to refuse his adhesion to all the pet theories of the hour, which in a few years the mob will attack as much as they now cry them up. Qualities such as these were no more tolerated by Lord Canning than they are by Louis Napoleon. The late viceroy resented independence in an official as a personal wrong, instead of using it, and surrounding himself with all the able men in India, as his predecessor did. Hence Mr. Campbell's previous reports, if they reached the public at all, were generally emasculated. Now that he has been exalted to the judicial peerage of India, where he can indirectly influence the whole administration of justice, we receive his report on Oudh for 1861-62 un mutilated. As far as possible we shall let him make his own revelations regarding our courts of justice, embracing in that term the character of our officers and of our laws and procedure. The good and the evil are alike pointed out; reforms are suggested, and a sport of impartial honesty distinguishes the whole. It is such a report as the Chief Justice might write regarding Bengal, for he lately administered to the executive the severest and most well-deserved reproof it has ever received, a reproof paralleled, as to its vigour at least, only by some of those bitter diatribes which so often issued from the Foreign-office when Mr. Beadon was Secretary. Mr. Campbell's first complaint is that the administrative machine is not fed by a sufficient supply of qualified officers. District officers and their subordinates are not only too few, and sometimes too inexperienced, but they look on the administration of justice as the least important of their duties. Post nummos justitia, Mr. Campbell hints, is a maxim too often acted on, and he thinks it necessary seriously to represent his belief that "the functions of a constantly peripatetic engineer are quite inconsistent with those of a judge." We cannot quote some of the instances, at once amusing and painful, given of the consequent failure of justice, but the remedy is that which we have urged from time to time—the creation of a separate judicial, like the financial service. Suppose two districts combined, it simply requires a re-distribution of the work under the existing officers to secure that each shall keep to his own special work for which he has been trained, without any extra expense. But the expenditure of more money on the administration of justice, we submit, must be conceded at once. To meet the paucity of our judges and fill up the gulf between them and indigenuous native talent, which wilems the more our system is Europeanised, Mr. Campbell would select, by competition, some of the many officers who are doing duty with European regiments, while the legal education of the natives is also attended to. Next to judges comes the question of civil law. "All our experience only shows more clearly its entire uncertainty and want of definition. It is rare that there is the least probability of two judges taking exactly the same view of a difficult question, because, there being no exact standards, every judge forms his own opinion of the law as it ought to be." To show how useless our native lawyers are, how they "can give misty and unintelligible texts for anything and on either side," we have the case of two retired or reduced native judges who wanted to plead in the Lucknow Courts. On being questioned they said they were not supposed to know anything about law, but they were up in all the regulations and constructions of technical procedure. Questions of sub stantive law they referred to pundits and moulvees, whose dicta Mr. Campbell compares to astrology and fortune-telling.—Friend of India.

THE INCOME-TAX.—The Friend of India says:—"Much has been said and written regarding the unsuitableness of the income-tax to India. We give no opinion whether direct taxation on means and substance is or is not adapted to the habits and customs of our native fellow subjects, but in common with most people we must admit that financially the present income-tax has been a failure. Raised chiefly from the official classes, from the officers of the army and the mercantile community, its incidence has been unequal and partial—and when raised from native towns and cities, it has proved to be a fertile source of irritation and of oppression in the hands of underlings. We do not hesitate to affirm, that one great cause of its comparative want of success is traceable to the complex involved nature of the Act under which it is levied. We have not only the whole of the provisions in the English Act imported into our Indian Bill, but there are numberless additions and amendments spread over two hundred and fifty sections, with most elaborate schedules attached, which it would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer to fill up aright. If ever the opium revenue should materially fall short, our English creditors may rest assured that the Stamp Act, so much pooh-poohed when the income-tax was on the anvil, will, next to the land-tax, prove to be our sheet anchor. In every respect it is adapted to our necessities and to native customs. We see no end to its fruitfulness and growing importance. Much credit is primarily due to Mr. Seance, but in a more special degree to Mr. Harington, who took up, remodelled, and rendered the Act all but complete."

A STRANGE ANIMAL!—A native journal at Cawnpore, which appears to be conducted with no small degree of literary ability, and which we have no manner of doubt enjoys a wide circulation, and high consideration among the natives of these provinces, brings us into acquaintance with an entirely new species of created beings, a member of which is reported to have made its appearance in the poetic region of Cashmere. The head of this astounding animal is just that of a man, while the rest of its body is an exact copy of a tiger's dreadful proportions. It combines within itself the insatiable rapacity of this prince of the feline race, and the intangible nature and locomotive powers of condemned spirits when they walk this gloomy world of sinners. It destroys incautious travellers by the hundred, it eludes the most determined pursuit of the bravest. A Brahmin who unhappily thought himself secure under the shield of his faith, and on the lofty eminence of his sacerdotal position, armed himself with a sword, and recklessly defied the perplexing hybrid, which, being no doubt over-powered by the odour of sanctity exhalant from the holy person of its antagonist, gracefully subsided into nothing, and left our Brahmin to chew the end of bitter reflection. This indomitable personage, foiled for the moment, yet more than ever determined to prosecute the adventure, established himself in a tree, and awaited the re-appearance of the monster, sword in hand. But seconds flew by, and became minutes, and the minutes were absorbed into hours, and still there was no sign of its coming. At last human nature began to assert itself, and our doughty Brahmin gradually closed his eyes in slumber. The awakening, says the narrator, was a rude one; for, when the Brahmin returned to consciousness, he found he had no head—or rather, to speak more practically, he never did recover his consciousness, and his body was found the next day, and carried away in mournful procession—a headless trunk!

JHANSIE, Feb. 27.—Nothing of public interest has been stirring here lately. The other day the Bija Bae of Gwalior, (Scindiah's grandmother) a toothless old lady of eighty, came into the city, and was received with a royal salute from our cantonments. The monument to the memory of the killed here in the mutiny is at last finished. It is to be hoped the designer is pleased with his performance, for I am afraid nobody else will be. It is an excessively ugly building, and resembles a Hindoo Temple. It is octagonal in shape, with four pillars at the corners, it stands about thirty feet high, and is surmounted with a thing intended for a cross, and is approached by a flight of four steps; the interior is about nine feet square. There are at present two marble slabs in the building, one to the memory of Lieut. Turnbull, of the Bengal Artillery, and the other to Mr. Carshore, collector of Customs, and his wife and four children, the youngest only eight months old. One peculiarity about the building is very striking; the doorways are all broader at the top than they are at the bottom, the effect of which is anything but pleasing to the eye. It is intended to surround the monument with a garden.

KOOSHTEE, March 2.—The Races came off on the mornings of Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, the 24th, 26th, and 28th ultimo, and the intermediate days were well filled up on the part of the gentlemen by various amusements and games. On the 26th the stewards issued invitations to the ladies of the station, as well as the visitors, to a ball in the evening, which was exceedingly well attended, and which passed off most agreeably. A band from Calcutta was in attendance, and dancing was kept up until far into the small hours of the morning, being then brought to a close with evident regret on the part of the ladies, who enjoyed it thoroughly. The week was ended by an excursion train from Calcutta, which brought a goodly number of people, and although (from some cause or other on the part of the authorities which I cannot explain) this train came after all the fun was over, the excursionists enjoyed themselves amazingly. I think it would be well if the railway companies would often repeat this idea of affording to your pent-up citizens an opportunity of enjoying a little pure air without entailing on themselves any great expense in travelling, and I feel sure that now that the Eastern Bengal Railway does so much in annihilating both time and space between Calcutta and Kooshtee, the latter place will very soon become more widely known than at present, and I venture to predict it will become a favourite resort to your confined citizens who thirst for pure air and repose.—Englishman.

MERCUT, March 8.—The Viceroy and Lady Elgin, accompanied by a large staff, arrived here yesterday morning. The whole of the troops here were formed up at six o'clock, and proceeded, under the command of Brigadier-General Wheeler, and Colonel Beaton, to the outskirts of the city, to await the arrival of his Excellency, which was announced by a salute of twenty-one guns. The troops of the station then faced about, and led the way to within a short distance of his Excellency's camp, where they halted on the roadside, formed line, opened the ranks and presented arms, until his Excellency and the whole of his escort had passed. The troops then returned to their respective barracks. A levee was held at noon, which was numerously attended. There is to be a grand review of all the troops at sunrise to-morrow, including those of his Excellency's camp, and as a plentiful supply of blank ammunition has been ordered, I fancy that the troops will have some warm work. I will send you the full particulars of the "engagement" in my next. The Commander-in-Chief is expected to arrive here to-morrow, but I believe the hour of his arrival is uncertain. There is to be a ball given to-morrow night to Lord and Lady Elgin and the Commander-in-Chief. I believe the Viceroy will leave again on Tuesday. There is nothing else of importance "afloat" here. The hot season is coming on fast, a part of its "attendant luxuries" having already arrived in the shape of buzzing, biting, and blood-sucking insects. Oh! horror of horrors!—I am bit again.

A NEW REBELLION IN OUDE.—Rebellion seems still to lurk in various districts of Oude. We learn from tolerably good authority that seditious letters, or chits, have recently been circulated among the Mahomedan inhabitants, inciting them, in the words of the Koran, to rise against her Majesty's Government. Several of the parties implicated in their distribution have been arrested, and committed to stand their trial.—Englishman.

BANK OF BENGAL.—The last returns of the Bank of Bengal show the following results. The loans on Government Securities have declared six lacs, and the bills discounted about 4½ lacs. The amounts now stand at 89 lacs and 79 lacs in round numbers. Considering, as noticed in our last, that a large amount of Government paper had been in a great measure pledged to the Bank, the former of these returns may be considered satisfactory to those interested in the well-being of the Presidency Bank. While on the subject of money we may remark that the eight lacs of rupees which were advertised for by the Municipal Commissioners of Calcutta have been taken up at par, and that more than double the amount has been tendered for. This shows that it is not the Calcutta public who are backward regarding municipal improvements. Any money that may be wanted for the benefit of the town, or in furtherance of any sensible schemes of conservancy reform will not, we are certain, be grudged by the inhabitants of a town which has been for years, and is now, in all its sanitary and municipal matters, a disgrace to the name of English administration.—Englishman.

LUCKNOW, March 9.—This place is now taking a rest, and all its prominent men, except General MacDuff, will for a long period be absent from it. He has got into the Dilkhoosha Palace, and is attempting to turn the little wilderness around it into a little Paradise. There is positively nothing of a public character on the tapis. The last attempt was a failure; the public having been invited to pay high to hear a lecture on the means of turning all men into gentlemen, "for the benefit of the Soldiers' Institute." Precious few tickets were taken, and the affair did not come off. Just before that our theatrical season closed with Bradon's "Beauty and the Beast,"—the author being severely commented on in the local journal as "the Byron of Lucknow!" He really did not deserve it. The piece, in its composition, getting up, and acting, was quite a success. The only fault that could reasonably be found with it was that its jokes were often at once too far-fetched and too local. Colonel Abbott and Dr. Douglas are about to visit England, and Colonel Barrow comes here from Secapore, as Commissioner, in the room of the former. Mr. Fraser, the Civil Judge, gets advanced, on the ground of merit, to the pay of a first class Deputy Commissioner, rupees, 1,500. This shows that even under Sir C. Trevelyan's financial regime, the rule is not that every salary is to be clipped. Major T. Chamberlain is booked for the city magistracy, as the most qualified candidate; the post having become vacant owing to the want of the special qualifications required for the duties in the last incumbent, a Bombay C.S., whose removal, however, was followed by promotion! There has been an unfortunate fracas between an officer of the Chief Engineer's staff, and the Treasury officer. The former fancied some slight, wrote offensively, and had his letter returned. He then went to the Treasury, and threatened to cane his adversary. This was met by a counter threat of horsewhipping, and by immediate ejection by the hands of the office peons. Instead of following up his threat to keep the matter in his own hands, the military officer went and complained to the Deputy Commissioner, who, having heard both sides, told him he was himself so flagrantly in the wrong that he ought at once to apologise, and the matter would be hushed up. This was refused, and the matter has gone up to the Chief Commissioner.—We have gathered a good quantity of ice both at the club-pits and at those of a mercantile establishment.—There is talk of a railway being at last laid down to Cawnpore by an English company. It is much needed, and will pay fairly.

NYNEE TAL, March 4.—The weather at this beautiful station is rather warmer than usual for the time of year; the mornings and evenings are delightfully cool. The scenery certainly exceeds all I have seen at other hill stations; a trip to the Kumaon iron works at Dechowrie, a few miles from Nynee Tal, is well worth the attention of visitors. The roads, I observe, are undergoing repairs, a thing which requires much attention in hill stations. His Honour the new Lieutenant-governor has, I hear, already taken a house here for the season, and may be expected up during the present month. Sir Hugh Rose is expected here in a day or two. The houses, I find, are nearly all taken for the present year; this augurs well for a full and gay season. I hear there are to be four hotels, also a new dawk bungalow, which is now in rapid progress; this looks well for travellers, seeing there can be no scarcity of accommodation. Nynee Tal certainly has its share of attractions, but still one thing is wanting, namely, a school for the education of European children. I hear that the house and landholders are taxed to a fearful extent. Why not, then, finish the good work by appropriating part of those enormous funds to the erection of a school.

MEDICAL COLLEGE STUDENTS.—The case of the mutinous native students of the Calcutta Medical College has, we hear, been finally disposed of by the Director of Public Instruction, to whom the matter was referred for decision. The director has pointed out to the students their folly in quitting the institution so rashly, and at the same time has directed them to rejoin their respective classes. These young men may congratulate themselves on getting off so cheaply, especially when they reflect that, had the affair taken place in an English college, every one concerned would most assuredly have been expelled.

DINAPORE SCANDALS.—Once more the Dinapore scandals, which resulted in the enforced resignation of his command by Brigadier Burney, have come in a new and more substantive form before the public. Failing in his repeated demands for a public enquiry, and finding Captain H. Eyre in Calcutta, on his way to England, on leave, Colonel Burney, we learn, has filed a plaint in the High Court, which will prevent the departure of that gentleman, whose secret charges are alleged to have been the source of the brigadier's disgrace, and bring the whole matter to an issue, far too long delayed, through the medium of an action for libel, damages laid at Rs. 50,000, and pretty well all of the Calcutta bar arrayed on either side, so that at last the subject will be sure of a thorough ventilation.

SCINDIA.—It was said that Scindia had offered a large sum for the immense kotce situated on the ridge which separates the city of Delhi from the cantonments, and known as Hindoo Rao's house, but there were some sanitary, and more political, objections to his being allowed to possess it. The Delhi correspondent of a neighbouring journal anticipates much mischief to result from such possession:—"It will completely subvert all the prestige of British power, all the moral results of the seige, and all the social and sanitary comfort of the place. The famous heights before Delhi impregnable to our force, will be invaded by the rabble of native society. Scindia will build walls, erect unsightly zenana compounds, and possibly barracks for some of his two well disciplined malcontents on the ridge within his boundary. There are vaults, and caverns, and old secret communications with Ferozabad, which could furnish ample accommodation for all sorts of supplies, and stores, and haunts to the evil. Scindia's residence would be intolerable, and inevitably lead to some memorable fracas."

BRAHMINICAL INFLUENCE.—We extract this epistle, addressed to the Hurkaru, as a sign of the times. Brahminical influence is fast losing ground, in Calcutta at least:—"Sir,—The other day I fell in with a bigoted Brahmin, who was much infuriated at my sitting in the same place with him at a gentleman's. I could hardly account for his rage, until I was given to learn that it was a doctrine in the Hindu Shasters, of which he is a devoted votary, that Brahmins should not sit together with Sudras. I am a Sudra, and my friend, the inveterate Brahmin, took umbrage at my besitting myself in proximity to him, which he styled a daring impudence on my part. In this age of refinement, is it not a matter of no little wonder to behold a fanatic Brahmin expressing his unwillingness, in terms not very decent, to take his seat on the same carpet with a Sudra? His obstinacy in refusing so to sit resembles that of a pig to proceed to any place where its master wishes to take it. It loves the mire too much to be dragged over to a less dirty spot. You may attach one end of a strong rope to its elongated nose, and order a pair of stout negroes to pull at the other, and employ a third to whip it with a bountiful hand,—and what would be the consequence? The animal, instead of stirring, will raise a fierce deafening noise, and collect strength sufficient to baffle all your efforts to drag it from its miry bed. It is for this reason that pigs, when they are to be taken from one place to another, are invariably shoved into bags and carried upon a pole, so obstinate is the animal; and the obstinacy of the Brahmins living at Oclah alias Beernuggur, Nuddea, Dacca, and other adjacent places, is not a whit less. Caste prejudices and other antique customs they would never forego, though the English and other civilised nations were to lecture them, and exhort them to do so till their voice turns hoarse. The Brahmins are very sorry to find that the Western civilisation is travelling within their realms, and pushing them out from their accustomed darkness. Like ghosts they revel in darkness, and abhor light. Satan did not more heartily dislike the sight of God than these Brahmins now do that of the English, whose heretic principles (heretic in their opinion) tend to derogate so much from their holy character in the estimation of the Sudras, whose life should be devoted to their service alone, and who should implicitly obey all their behests. They sigh for the days of Menu, and wish them back again—but in vain. I would call upon my offended friend to learn that men have now grown too wise to pin any faith on the divinity of his dogma—that out of Brahma's mouth all have sprung, and not to see the cunning and craftiness that underlie the religious systems and ceremonies he avows. The days of delusion and darkness have gone by, and the bright effulgence of the light of true knowledge is fast spreading over the benighted land. I would conjure my friend not to distinguish any longer between Brahmins and Sudras, as being alien to the spirit of the age, and learn to live in peace and unity with God."

RAILWAY TRAFFIC RETURN of the Lahore and Umritsur section of the Punjab Railway (thirty-two miles) for the week ending the 15th February, 1863:—

Number of passengers ...	8,560
Amount received from these ...	Rs. 3,102 5 0
" " for baggage ...	" 298 5 0
" " for goods ...	" 38 3 0
Total ...	Rs. 3,438 13 0

A high figure, but it must be remembered that the educational durbur occurred during this week, and added considerable grist to the mill.—Delhi Gazette, March 10.

COLONEL MACKENZIE.—The appointment to officiate as Superintendent of Army Clothing will be vacant next month by the departure for England of Colonel C. Mackenzie, on sick leave, and there are many applicants for the post in the field, amongst others, we believe, Colonel C. S. Reid, of the Artillery, who, we hope, will be the successful competitor. The gift of such an appointment to a gallant officer who is disabled by the loss of an arm on the field of battle would be a graceful act on the part of the Government, and would be some compensation for the supercession which we noticed when the Inspectors-General of Artillery were appointed, especially as we believe that supercession was explained solely on the ground of physical inefficiency caused by the mutilation above referred to. If this inefficiency does exist, surely it is the strongest claim that an officer who has incurred it on the field of battle can have to an appointment of comparative quiet and repose.

AGRA.—The unusually hot weather we have had for the last week or ten days (at least, it feels unusually hot, as it always does, at Agra when we get the first taste of the warm weather) was followed by a storm of rain on the night of the 9th of March. It is not unworthy of remark that we had a storm exactly on the same date last year. The 10th was rainy, and the 11th cloudy. The air is cooler in consequence, but sickness (of no serious character) is very prevalent.

THE DIRECTOR-GENERALSHIP OF THE POST-OFFICE.—On the principle that what every one says must be true, this office is certain to be abolished. The truth is that it might not only have long since been done away with, but should never have been created. The office was intended in Lord Dalhousie's time, it was said, to provide for Mr. Riddell. Mr. Beadon was Secretary in the Home Department at the time, and when the Governor-General and members of the Executive Council had "minuted" on the new office, Mr. Beadon, though not a member of the Council, ventured to pen and send in a minute of his own adverse to the creation of the new appointment. There are many of our readers who will remember that it was with reference to this "Secretary's minute" Lord Dalhousie penned the bitter reproof of Mr. Beadon for interfering, which clandestinely found its way into the columns of a Calcutta journal, and, under the designation given to it by the other journals of "The Stolen Despatch," created a little sensation.—Phoenix.

DEYRAH, March 8.—This delightful little place has been quite gay lately. We have had two balls during the last week, and very pleasant ones they were. Some of the ladies went straight from the ball for their morning rides, so you can imagine with what spirit the dancing was kept up. The Deyrah Mall, which used to be a dangerous, is now a pleasant evening promenade; the danger pedestrians used to be in of being ridden over by fair equestrians has now much lessened, in consequence of all the latter (without, I believe, one exception) having had a spill. I regret to inform you of two deaths that have occurred here during the last two days. Major Sweetenham, late of the Engineers, died at noon on Friday, and was buried with military honours last evening. Doctor Crozier, of the 104th Regiment, died yesterday (Saturday), and was buried this morning. Both have left widows and families to mourn their loss. We have sustained a severe loss in the Cashmere Survey party, who left yesterday, under Captain Montgomerie, for Cashmere, via Sealkote. May good health and luck attend them; they are general favourites here, and deservedly so. The officers of the Sirmoor Rifles are building a mess-house, which promises to be a substantial and comfortable building.

DR. BHADU DAI.—At the last meeting of the Calcutta Bethune Society, after an able lecture by Mr. Cowell of the Sanscrit College on "the Contrast between Legendary and Authentic History," the Rev. Dr. Duff introduced Dr. Bhadu Daji, and his three Parsee friends from Bombay. We are glad that Dr. Bhadu Daji administered at once a rebuke and some encouragement to the apathetic and selfish gentry of Bengal. He exhorted them to action. "In general education they were ahead of Bombay and Madras, they had proved themselves to be apt scholars and able writers. But there seemed to be still too great a tendency to abstract and speculative meditation, indolence and apathy, as opposed to the practical energy, activity, self-exertion, and self-abnegation, which alone would issue in real, rapid extensive progress and reform. Much of what he had seen in Bengal reminded him of the calm, contemplative, but fixed and motionless sculptures in the Buddhist caves of Western India." He referred also to the exposure of the sick at the river ghats, and other evil practices. Let the Bengalees travel and tell us what they think of Bombay, where there is far more earnestness.

STEAM PLOUGHS IN BENGAL.—The introduction of steam ploughs into the districts of Lower Bengal has thus far proved a success. On one estate the saving by the use of plough is at least two hundred per cent. It is employed chiefly to cut up jungly land in which roots abound, and it does the work most effectually. The only drawback is the want of facilities for repairs, such as every village smithy in England would supply, but this will be gradually remedied. More than one planter is about to use machinery for ploughing, sawing wood, pumping water, and beating the indigo vats. By machinery and improved modes of agriculture the difficulty of labour and insufficient supply of produce per acre will be overcome in time.

HINDOO INSCRIPTIONS.—At the last meeting of the Bengal Asiatic Society Dr. Bhadu Daji, of Bombay, read a paper on the value of the numerical symbols in ancient Hindoo inscriptions. He had been enabled to ascertain their correct value from finding certain inscriptions, especially those at Nassick, where the symbols occurred with their value at the same time given in words. Dr. Bhadu Daji also added some remarks on the era of Salivahan, which he would identify with the era of Kshaharata or Phrahates, one of the Arsacids. In the same way, it seemed to him not improbable that the era of Vikramaditya was introduced by the Buddhists or Jains, and that it corresponds to the victory obtained by the Parthians over Crassus, B.C., 53. Colonel Thuillier, the president, offered to produce fac-similes of the inscriptions on a reduced scale by the photo-lithographic process, which, although in its infancy here, is peculiarly adapted for such purposes. He expressed a hope also that Dr. Bhadu Daji, in the course of his travels in the N. W. Provinces and Kashmir, would be able to transmit to the society some of the fruits of his researches.

JYNTEAH.—No fresh intelligence has come to hand regarding the Jynteah and Cossyah rebellion, but we are told that the services of the 28th Regiment of Punjab Native Infantry are no longer required in the hill districts of Cossyah, from which we should be glad to infer that things are settling down to a quiet state. In the mean time, the thanks of Government have been tendered by Mr. Beadon to Lieutenants Sadlier and Walcott in acknowledgment of services rendered by them in the capture of Okiang Nungha, the principal leader of the rebels at Jynteah. His Honour has also sanctioned the payment of Rs. 500, to be distributed amongst the sepoys who accompanied the officers and assisted at the capture.

ADULTERATION OF JUTE.—The practice of adulterating cotton, which is so ruinous in Bombay, has appeared in Bengal in the case of jute. A bale, which formed part of a large consignment from the eastern districts, lately fell to pieces, and it was found that water had been poured into its centre. Suspicion was aroused, and the discovery was made that all the bales had been similarly treated, so as to increase the weight. This may be the beginning of an extended system of fraud in the case of an article which has hitherto been free from suspicion, and we trust merchants and dealers will sternly set their faces against it, by refusing to purchase the adulterated article. One of the Madras journals exposes the extent to which adulteration is now practised in all the articles of produce exported from the south.

FROM AGRA TO INDORE the journey may be performed in six days by bullock train. Ladies and children should take their own "shigram." The road as far as Goonah, about 210 miles, is very good, beyond that the less said about it the better. From Indore to the nearest railway station, Jelgaon, 162 miles or thereabouts, the road is passable. There is, as we pointed out, no bullock train on this road, but there are good dawk bungalows along the road. There is another road from Indore through the Scindwa jungles to Munnar, about 220 miles from Indore, another railway station. On this road, too, the mail cart is the method of travelling. The fare for a first class ticket from Jelgaon to Bombay is about 15 rupees.—Delhi Gazette.

TELEGRAPH LINES.—India will have, by the end of this year, a second partial line of telegraph to London, in addition to that by the Euphrates valley and Persian Gulf. Sir Macdonald Stephenson's company, which bought the abandoned Red Sea cable, have leased the wire from Alexandria to Suez to Messrs. Glass, Elliott, and Co., who work the Malta and Alexandria cable, and the company is about to raise £50,000 for a line from Cairo to El Arish, Beyrout, Iscanderoon, or Aleppo, to meet the wire from Constantinople to India. Branches will probably be made to Jerusalem, and other cities of Syria. Thus, if an accident occurs to the Syrian part of the Constantinople and India line, messages will be sent through Egypt along the new wire.

SIMLA, March 7.—On the 1st of this month the heat here was excessive—excessive to a degree for the time of the year. The thermometer, in the shade, stood at 74 degrees; and, from this fact, the inference is that the heat, at the same time, in the plains was excessive also. The temperature of the atmosphere diminishes, according to a given law, 1 deg. in every 352 feet of ascent; and granting the height of Simla to be 7,500 feet above the level of the sea, which it is, or nearly so, then the heat of the plains must have been, on that day, just 21 degs. greater than here. The temperature decreases, almost in regular progression, as the height from the sea-level increases. The following table derived from a report of a balloon ascent exhibits the decrease of heat as the aeronaut rose in the air:—

3,460	...	59.2
5,880	...	57.8
7,530	...	51.4

Thus, in ascending from 120 feet to 7,530 feet, there was a decrease of temperature of 19.10 degrees—which is very much the same as saying there is a decrease of 21 degrees, or nearly so, in ascending from the plains to Simla. If the figures above are not absolutely, they are approximately correct—correct enough, at all events, for all practical calculations. But although the air is cooler, the sun's rays are as powerful at Simla as in the plains, even, perhaps, more powerful. "At Gwalior the greatest heat of the sun's rays in the hot winds of 1850 was 133 degrees; at Simla, 7,500 feet, it was 134 degrees; but in Rukhu, 15,500 feet, Trebeck observed a solar heat of 144 degrees, and in the same district Gerard measured the incredible rise of 158 degrees, which is only 27 degrees below the boiling point of water in that district." The direct rays of the sun, therefore, should, by all visitors to these hills, be sedulously avoided; for although the air in ascending from the plains becomes cooler, the intensity of the sun's rays is rather enhanced than lessened. The truth is, that in elevated regions the air offers little or no check to the transmission of the solar rays, and the more rarified the air, the more powerful, so to speak, are those rays. The direct heat of the sun, and, possibly, the foul emanations from the bazaar, may have more to do in generating and propagating some forms of disease, oftentimes so prevalent here, than people have hitherto cared to acknowledge.—Delhi Gazette.

LAHORE.—On the approaching departure of Dr. Hathaway, we hear that Dr. A. M. Dallas will officiate as Inspector General of Prisons in the Punjab, when Dr. J. C. Penny will act in his place as Superintendent of the Central Jail at Lahore. On the departure for England, a few days hence, of General Van Cortlandt, his post of Deputy Commissioner of Mooltan will be temporarily filled by Captain P. Maxwell, whose duties at Googaira will be undertaken by Mr. Burney, until the services of Mr. Blyth be available.—Chronicle.

THE NANA'S REPRESENTATIVE.—We hear that a Fakcer has been caught at Cawnpore who has been giving himself out as the representative of Nana Peishwa and his nephew, with seditious papers on him, trying to excite disaffection. He gives his name as Madho Rao, and professes to have "full powers" from the Nana to enlist troops and all the rest of it. Three other emissaries have also been apprehended, and their photographs sent to the magistrate. This is a sort of moral epidemic which seems to break out every year about this time.

LOCUSTS.—A communication from Umritsur of the 9th Feb. informs us that locusts were still infesting the neighbourhood, but that the most energetic efforts were being adopted by the Deputy-Commissioner, Major Farrington, for destroying the living insects, and securing their eggs. The latter is a most important measure, as the grub of next year if allowed to come to maturity will cause immense damage. In one district, it is said, these eggs were being brought in by maunds. The natural history of the locust is clearly not sufficiently known.

RAILWAY TO DELHI.—On Sunday, Feb. 1, the first train from Allypore left Allahabad a few minutes after seven in the morning, and arrived at its destination at eleven at night. Thus we have railway communication to within eighty miles of Delhi, which only the want of sleepers prevents us from reaching by rail. Only 140 miles now remain to complete the communication between Calcutta and a point near Delhi, and six months hence that will be accomplished, with the exception of the Jumna bridges. We publish elsewhere the well deserved eulogy passed by the Viceroy, in a formal notification, of the officers of the East Indian Railway Company, and especially of Mr. George Turnbull, the chief engineer:—"His Excellency the Viceroy will not fail to bring to the favourable notice of her Majesty's Government the long and excellent services of Mr. Turnbull, who, having been the first railway engineer employed in India, has now happily seen the portion of this great work on which he was more particularly engaged brought to a close after many years of arduous and persevering labour, under circumstances of unusual difficulty, with the most complete satisfaction to his employers and to the Government, and with the highest credit to himself." Begun in 1851, the progress of the East Indian Railway has not been short of ninety miles a year thus far—a rate most satisfactory when we remember the Sonthal and mutiny wars, and the magnitude of works such as the great girder bridge over the Soane, declared by Lord Elgin to be exceeded in magnitude by only one bridge in the world.

JEYPORE.—Letters from Jeypore inform us of an attack having been recently made by the natives on the surveyor's camp, at present stationed in that quarter. An encounter took place, in which several of the surveyor's party were wounded, but they succeeded in capturing two of the Jeypore ringleaders. The origin of the affray is not yet known.

MR. E. H. PRINSEP.—We believe Mr. E. H. Prinsep has received instructions from Government to revise the settlements of the three districts of Umritsur, Goordoss, and Sealkote. The duties of the office will in all likelihood extend over two years, entailing a cost of something like a lakh of rupees.—Englishman.

CENTRAL INDIA HORSE.—We hear that it is the intention of the Government to reduce the number of Native officers in the Central India Horse by the payment of gratuities to those whose services may no longer be required.

SACRIFICE TO KALKEE.—Letters from Rajpootana inform us that a "native gentleman" of religious tendencies has been arrested for sacrificing his wife to the goddess Kalkee; the said lady having practised witchcraft on him. The bewitched fanatic is at present in the hands of the police, who are so blind as not to recognise the act as one of singular devotedness and a practical application of the new divorce law.

INDORE.—We hear from Indore that one of the native chiefs of that place is enlisting armed men with the intention of disturbing the peace of that country. The authorities there have issued orders to the effect that any persons joining in the movement will be treated as rebels.

DR. JONES.—We regret to hear that Dr. Jones, of his Excellency's body-guard, has met with a sad accident by a fall from his horse. It appears that he mounted a Waler for the purpose of hunting a hyena that had been brought into camp. The horse, being unused to the spear, commenced kicking so violently that he threw the rider over his head. Although the fall was a severe one, and the unfortunate gentleman has been suffering a great deal, yet favourable hopes are entertained of his speedy recovery.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MADRAS AND BOMBAY RAILWAYS.—The Madras Athenaeum states that the Madras and Bombay Railways, which were to have met at Moodgul, will probably form their junction at Hyderabad. Both Governments have recommended this, and the decision rests with the home authorities. As it is not determined whether the Madras Company shall have the privilege of constructing the line when it enters the Nizam's dominions, the district from the Kistna to Hyderabad has not been surveyed. Of the portion surveyed, seventy-seven miles will be in a straight line, and not more than nine miles curved, while the gradients required are by no means heavy. One bridge, forty-six chains in length, will have to be built across the Toongabudra, and another large bridge will be required to cross the Hindry. The minor streams to be crossed are sixteen in number. Adoni appears to be the largest town on the route. The country around it is highly cultivated, and the population is set down at seventeen thousand. Nearly the whole country is one plain of black cotton soil. On every ground, political and commercial, this route should be adopted.

HYDERABAD, Feb. 25.—The Brahmin who was taken at Barsee has been recognised by the people sent hence to identify him, as the person who was endeavouring last year to get up a rebellion at this place. The scarcity of grain has reduced the poor to a deplorable condition. The Nizam and the minister have manifested great anxiety to relieve their distress. His Highness knows of but one method—which is, to order a reduction to be made in prices. The minister knows better, and is aware that this would be to produce a famine immediately. We have on record here that, Nizam Ali Khan's Government having compelled the merchants to sell at fixed prices, the consequence was cessation of the importation of grain into the city; famine ensued, an insurrection of the people took place, and a gate of the Nizam's palace was burnt down by the mob. The recollection of this may be useful. The minister's method has been to advance money to the principal dealers in grain, themselves opulent sahokars, and to reduce the duties on it, (why the whole has not been remitted I do not know,) in consideration of which the sahokars agreed to keep the prices of grain at certain fixed rates for the next six months, when relief might be expected from the coming harvest. They have failed to keep their engagement, and although I do not believe there was any limitation upon prices, yet as this arrangement was calculated to interfere with the traffic, its effects were the same as if there had been. Dookans were shut up, and the supply of grain thrown into the market by the contractors was insufficient for the demands of the day. The deficiency produced its usual consequences—tumult in all the bazaars; but nothing worse than a few broken heads, and the ripping up of some sacks occurred. The arrangement with the contractors has been broken off. Grain dealers are allowed to sell at their own prices; and though prices have risen in consequence, the supply is sufficient for the day, and thousands do not, as before, go away without being able to purchase grain. The scarcity is real, though all affect to say that it is occasioned by the hoarding of grain—of itself, if it be fact, a proof of the scarcity;—and it is so understood by the authorities, for the grain dealers are not allowed to sell at one time more than one rupee's worth to any person. This, as tending to economize grain and preserve it for the poor, is a right measure; else we should see powerful persons purchasing in large quantities, and transferring the hoards from the grain-dealers' stores, if there be really hoards there, to their own houses, where it would be entirely locked up from the poor, and serve to bring on a famine before its time. These are anxious times with us. The grain dealers are not yet satisfied with the prices they have put upon their grain. I fear they act, though mistakenly, under some misapprehension of a pressure coming upon them from their rulers; but neither their rulers nor themselves can prevent, if there be scarcity, enhanced prices. I fear that two months, if we are not relieved by the jowar crop, now about to be brought home, will produce an actual famine. I was in the midst of that which raged in 1802-3. God preserve us from such another sight!—Englishman.

THE OFFICIAL INQUIRY INTO THE LOSS OF THE S. S. "JASON."—This case came on for final disposal at the Town Police-office, Madras, when Colonel Wilson, one of the commissioners, proceeded to state the decision they had arrived at. In doing so, Colonel Wilson remarked that, after due consideration, they found they were unable to exonerate the commander, Captain Hurst, from all blame, as there were some very grave omissions on his part. Enumerating these, the commissioner said that under the circumstances they were obliged to suspend his certificate for a period of twelve months.—Mr. Ritchie, who appeared on behalf of the captain, then submitted to the commissioners, that as the certificate was with him he declined producing it, on the ground that the whole of the proceedings had been illegal. However, he wished the commissioners would allow him time for the purpose of trying the question of jurisdiction. The commissioners complied with his request, and accordingly sit again to-day at the usual hour. The commissioners of the Jason inquiry having met at the town police-court, at the usual hour, Captain Hurst and Mr. Ritchie attended shortly afterwards. Captain Hurst on being called upon to give up his certificate, in accordance with the previous day's decision, now declined to do so; whereupon Colonel Wilson proceeded to adjudge the penalty, which was a fine of 400 Rupees, in default a warrant of distress. If on the return of the warrant, no sufficient distress was obtainable, the sentence would be imprisonment in the Penitentiary for three months. It was the ordinary course, when a distress warrant was issued, if the person so desired, to accept a security for the attendance of the prisoner, until such time as the warrant was returned. If Captain Hurst wished it, the commissioners would accept Mr. Ritchie's security in this case. This being declined on the part of Captain Hurst, the commissioners ordered him to be detained in the custody of a constable till the requisite recognizance was forthcoming, or until the warrant was returned. Mr. Ritchie intimated that he would hold the Commissioners personally responsible for the future consequence of these proceedings, and would in the meantime demand a copy of the commitment under which Captain Hurst was detained. This, Colonel Wilson said, would be given, when it was formally prepared. Captain Hurst was then put in charge of Constable Lapprian, and the commitment being duly prepared, a copy was delivered over to Mr. Ritchie soon afterwards. This terminated the proceedings at the Town Police Office, Mr. Ritchie declaring his intention to move the judges of the High Court in the matter, during the course of the day, having previously served the Commissioners with a notice of certiorari. Late in the afternoon the captain paid the penalty of Rs. 400, and was released from custody.

A THREE-FOOT GAUGE TRAMWAY.—Colonel Ouchterlony has laid before the Madras Government a scheme for a three-foot gauge tramway from the railway station to Coimbatore up the Coonoor Ghaut to the Neigherry plateau. Colonel Ouchterlony is sanguine of being able to turn to profitable account for propelling trains the water power which now falls in cataracts down the Coonoor Pass. His estimate, involving the use of Barlingham's patent sleepers, is fixed at twenty-five lakhs, and he expects a return of ten per cent.

Government have sanctioned an examination of the Ghaut. Colonel Ouchterlony hopes to induce the branch railway or tramway company to undertake the work. He says that the Neigherries have become a spot of decidedly popular resort amongst the native community, as is evidenced in the prodigious increase which has taken place in the number of settlers—in the extent to which land is being taken up by them in all directions (chiefly as potato and vegetable gardens), and in the general thriving and well-to-do aspects which mark the native community. There is no doubt that in a few years South India will be governed from this glorious plateau.

FREEMASONRY.—We have carefully read the sermon which the chaplain of Maulmain preached to the brethren of Lodge Philanthropy at Maulmain, on last St. John's day, and we have also carefully read the remarks on the sermon by a past master. The chaplain endeavours to show the ethics of Freemasonry to be unnecessary, and the whole system to be opposed to the Christian dispensation, which sweeping condemnation is denounced by the past master as undeserved and incorrect. We must refer our readers to the pamphlet itself for further particulars of this quasi theological controversy, merely remarking that the introduction to the past master's criticism on the chaplain's sermon is, in our judgment, unpleasant in tone and out of place. No excuse, however, can be made for the exceeding bad taste displayed by the chaplain in taking advantage of a special masonic occasion to preach against the assembled brotherhood. Had the members of Lodge Philanthropy but known of this intention, they would probably have omitted going to church at all, and the reverend lecturer would then have written his sermon for wooden walls and a few punks.—Rangoon Gazette, Feb. 13.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, Feb. 28.—The principal intelligence of the fortnight refers to a defeat sustained by a combined force of Ward and Imperial troops before the city of Tui-tsan. It will be remembered that the Ward force of drilled Chinese recently passed into the command of Captain Holland, of the Royal Madras Light Infantry, on the removal of General Burgevine by the native authorities at Shanghai. A correspondent concludes an account of the disastrous affair as follows:—"The rebels fought admirably, and were all well armed with European muskets. A mistake was made in placing the guns so close to the walls; the artillerymen were shot down as they stood beside them, as there was no cover. I doubt whether their fire did much execution amongst the garrison, as it was all concentrated on one point of the wall; which, of course, they took good care to avoid. When the troops advanced to the assault, however, they stood gallantly in the breach and fired point blank at them. The loss of the Soongking force cannot yet be correctly ascertained, as stragglers will probably drop in for some days to come. At the present time it consists of about 500 killed, wounded, and missing. Twenty casualties occurred amongst the Europeans. Captains Maunder, Macarthy, Macleod, and Bosworth, killed, and twelve other officers, besides four marines, wounded. Among the former are Captains Graham, Murray, Tapp, Silvertown, and Dunn. The latter is shot through the groin, and it is feared will not recover."

In Japan another outrage has been committed upon the British Minister—not in his person fortunately, but in the destruction of the new Legation building at Yedo, a portion of which was completed. It appears that, of late, the strongest desire has existed among the Japanese authorities at Yedo to have the place demolished. They proposed to give Colonel Neale any other place he might choose from a number at their disposal, and to bear all the expense of removing the building from the Goto-yama (the Hyde Park of Yedo) to the place Col. Neale should select. The latter did not like to act in the matter after the site had been deliberately conceded to Mr. Alcock and approved by him. In the meantime, those hostile to its remaining on the Goto-yama had it set fire to and demolished by bags of gunpowder, on the 1st inst. The hostility of the Japanese is on the increase, and they are gradually preparing for the worst. From the Shanghai Recorder we quote the following orders of the Mikado to the Tycoon with respect to foreigners:—"For a long time the plan of expelling the barbarians has been thought upon by us, and, although it has been put off up to the present time, the Imperial will cannot change. Whilst in the department of the Tycoon changes have been gradually made in every way in the carrying out of a new system, we have remarked the respect entertained for our will. But if now the sure expulsion of the barbarians does not take place, the hearts of the people will not be united. This causes great sorrow to the Imperial bosom. Let the Tycoon do all in his power to ensure the expulsion of the barbarians, and orders must speedily be given to all the Daimios. Moreover, it is the duty of the commander in chief of the army (the Tycoon or Shōgun) to carry out the steps of the scheme. Quickly and with haste complete the whole resolve; make certain what has been deliberated upon for the state up to the present; and determine on the precise time when communications with the ugly barbarians shall cease. You will present a report to us on this matter."—Overland China Mail.

The Evening Mail (Hong Kong) says:—News arrived here on the 16th February, that some outrage, unattended with loss of life, had been perpetrated on the Castle, in Yedo, just finished for the British Minister to reside in. The admiral, not in consequence of this, it is believed, has gone on to Japan in the Euryalus with the Rattler and Racehorse, and will be followed immediately by all the gunboats that can be made available.

Mr. G. Turnbull and the East Indian Railway.

Benares, Feb. 7.—H. E. the Viceroy on his arrival at this city desires to congratulate the officers of the East Indian Railway Company and the public on the completion of the additional section of the Grand Trunk line of Railway from Calcutta to the North West Provinces that has been recently opened to Benares, and on the prospects of the early opening of the whole line for traffic up to Allahabad and Delhi.

2. The distance from Calcutta by rail to Benares is 541 miles. Work was begun in 1851. The line to Burdwan was opened in Feb. 1855; to Adjai in Oct. 1858; to Rajmehal in Oct. 1859; to Bhagulporo in 1861; to Monghyr in Feb. 1862; and to Benares in Dec. 1862. In ten years, therefore, have been opened (including branches) a continuous length of 601 miles, being at the rate of sixty miles a-year. This is exclusive of the portion of the line already finished between Allahabad and Agra, in the N.W. Provinces, and of the section from Agra to Allypore, which it is expected will be ready in a few weeks. Including this length, the progress of the East Indian Railway has not been short of ninety miles a-year, a rate which, if it has not come up to the expectations first entertained, is, under all the circumstances of the case, satisfactory as regards the past, and encouraging as regards the future.

3. On his journey from Calcutta to Benares H.E. observed with much interest the numerous striking works that have been so successfully constructed on this railway by the company's engineers, and viewed with particular admiration the great girder bridge over the Sonne, which, it is believed, is exceeded in magnitude by only one bridge in the world. The smaller girder bridges over the Keul and Hullohur, the heavy flood arching in the vicinity of these rivers, the masonry bridges over the Adjai and More, and the Monghyr tunnel, also attracted the attention of H.E. the Viceroy, as works of more than ordinary difficulty designed and carried out with signal ability.

4. H.E. the Gov. gen. gladly accepts this opportunity of acknowledging the services rendered by the officers of the railway company in the prosecution of this great work; and of expressing more especially the strong sense he entertains of the high engineering skill and the steady devotion to his duties exhibited by Mr. George Turnbull, the chief engineer of the company in Bengal, who, in a few days, will give up the direction of the works which he has now seen completed. Although not in the immediate employment of the Government, Mr. Turnbull has, in the opinion of H.E., well earned the expression of the thanks of the Gov. gen. for his professional services, which have, indeed, been rendered as much to the public as to the railway company. In all Mr. Turnbull's dealings with the officers of the Govt. he has invariably shown that moderation and desire to conciliate which were essential for the harmonious and successful carrying on of the railway works, under the peculiar conditions imposed by the terms of the Government guarantee; and the Gov. gen. has much satisfaction in signifying, in behalf of the Govt. of India, his high estimation of the manner in which all Mr. Turnbull's relations with the Government have been conducted.

5. H.E. the Viceroy will not fail to bring to the favourable notice of H.M.'s Government the long and excellent services of Mr. Turnbull, who, having been the first railway engineer employed in India, has now happily seen the portion of this great work on which he was more particularly engaged brought to a close, after many years of arduous and persevering labour, under circumstances of unusual difficulty, with the most complete satisfaction to his employers and to the Government, and with the highest credit to himself.

FUTTYGHUR AND MORADABAD.

It is reported that his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose has resolved to abandon Futtyghur as a station for European troops, and that the wing of the 88th Regiment, now there, will be immediately removed to Shajehanpore. It is also said that Moradabad is to be abandoned, and that a regiment is to be stationed at Lohoo Ghat, in spite of the remonstrance of the Commissioner of Kumaon.

THE NATIVE HOSPITAL AT CALCUTTA.

THE Native Hospital in Calcutta, which annually gives medical and surgical attendance to a thousand in-door patients and fifty thousand out-patients, is supported partly by the State and partly by voluntary contributions. It is now in need of about fifteen thousand rupees for its extension, and for certain sanitary improvements, and an appeal is made to the European and Native communities for subscriptions to this amount. The institution is for the benefit of Natives only, but it seems that it is supported almost exclusively by Europeans; for while the latter have contributed for years most liberally to its support, the whole native community of Calcutta, including Rajahs and Baboos who spend their lakhs upon a single nautch, amounts to the pitiful sum of thirty rupees a-month.

THE EDUCATION DURBAR AT LAHORE.

ONLY fifteen years ago the Country of the Five Rivers was independent of British rule. Ten years earlier, soon after the death of Runjeet Singh, that land exhibited a terrible spectacle of barbarous anarchy and disunion, until contending factions suspended their civil warfare to unite their whole strength against the common enemy, the then hated Feringhees. They invaded the British border with a large and well-appointed army, and proved that they were foemen worthy of our steel. But the battle of Goozerat brought the fierce struggle to a close, and in 1849 the Punjab was a British territory. It is now a peaceful and well ordered state, and we are not likely to forget that those who once fought so bravely and earnestly against us, in our hour of peril in the great mutiny, fought as bravely and earnestly on our side, and rejected every temptation to avenge upon us the loss of their national independence. We are now taking the best means in our power to impart to the Sikhs the blessings of Western civilisation, and from the report of the distribution of prizes to the students of the Lahore High School and other Government scholastic establishments in the province, at which Sir Robert Montgomery presided on the 23rd of February last, our readers will perceive that we have not worked in vain. Hundreds of intelligent native schoolboys were whirled rapidly through the air in a special train from Umritsur and the neighbourhood, and they were accompanied by at least a thousand chiefs and citizens. They were received in a large Government camp-tent, where, instead of a display of guns and swords and other instruments of destruction, were exhibited the most exquisite specimens of the latest inventions in the sciences and arts adapted to advance human happiness and comfort, and the progress of civilisation. His Honour the Lieutenant-governor, seated in a chair of state, listened with great attention and apparent pleasure to the Report of the Director of Public Instruction. On the conclusion of the report, his Honour rose and expressed a natural feeling of exultation at "the novel and delightful spectacle of upwards of a thousand children, the sons of the nobility and middle classes, congregated together at the capital, not as their fathers used to be, for aggression or strife, but rivals for distinction in literature and science." Sir Robert Montgomery earnestly recommended the chieftains to encourage the cause of female education, if not in public schools at least in their own homes, and it is pleasing to hear that one fine old man with a snowy beard, Diwan Ajoodhia Purshad, described as the Nestor of the assembly, promised, on behalf of the upper classes at Lahore, that a committee should be formed to take his Honour's recommendation into respectful consideration, and that the result should be laid before the Government at an early date.

Sir Robert Montgomery, in the ardour of his zeal, is a little too sanguine when he expresses a hope that in another fifteen years the sons of the Punjab, whose fathers proved themselves most worthy foemen of Briton's best soldiers, "will take as high a position in learning and intelligence as they did in war." Nations do not advance at this railway rapidity. England did not take fifteen years only to arrive at her present intellectual condition, and we cannot even fairly anticipate that after the lapse of centuries the natives of the Punjab will be fitted to maintain with the countrymen of Shakespeare, and Bacon, and Newton, an intellectual contest to be compared for a moment in potency and credit with their physical force struggle with us fifteen years ago. But though they are not likely to exhibit an amount of intellectual greatness in a few years which it has taken the English so many centuries to arrive at, we may fairly expect in fifteen years or less from this date that there will be at least fifty times as much general intelligence amongst the people of the Punjab as that diffused amongst them at this day, when the cause of national education is only in its infancy.

WASTE LANDS AND OPEN CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION.

It is a sign that a question respecting India and its two hundred thousand millions of people is no longer of less interest than a Turnpike Bill at home, when we find "the leading journal of Europe," which watches so closely every turn of the public mind, can venture to devote more than two columns to a couple of leaders on two different Anglo Indian topics on the same day. The first leader is on the important question of Waste Lands in India. The writer gives a pretty fair explanation of the dispute—or rather difference of opinion—between the late Lord Canning and Sir Charles Wood. He says, very truly, that in our colonies waste lands and lands lying waste are convertible terms, but that they are not so in India; because, in the latter country, though they are neglected or abandoned, they may yet be property in which the owners take a pride and pleasure, though they will not go to the trouble and expense of improving them. The late Governor-general decided that when any European settler wished to turn waste lands to account, he might secure them in perpetuity by payment made at once, or by allowing them to remain on mortgage at an interest of ten per cent. The Collector in such case was to advertise the sale for thirty days, that claimants might have due notice. If no claimant appeared within that time the land was the purchaser's. If a claimant appeared after that time, but within the year, he was to have a Government compensation. If he appeared after the expiration of a year his claim was to be forfeited. The price of the land was to be ten shillings an acre free from jungle, or five shillings an acre if jungle land. If more than one bidder appeared, the lot was to be put up to auction. The survey of the land might be deferred till after the purchase. To this Sir Charles Wood objected. He insisted that the land should be surveyed before it was disposed of, that it should in every case be disposed of by auction, and that if the original proprietor at any time claimed his land he would be entitled to compensation, and on no account be utterly deprived of all remedy. The Secretary of State for India seems to have been very anxious to satisfy the Natives of the regard of the British Government for their legal rights. But perhaps Sir Charles Wood goes too far in favour of one side. If we are to carry out the principle acted upon by him to its fullest extent, the original Land proprietor is strictly entitled to re-possession of his land at any time, and ought not to be compelled to accept in its stead a pecuniary equivalent, and it is the new purchaser who ought to be compelled to give up possession to the first owner, and be satisfied with a compensation from Government. But then no one would buy land on such conditions, and to prevent litigation and disputes some moderate period should be fixed at which the new possessor would be able to make certain of his property in spite of all future claims; or otherwise, in a country like India, where false evidence and forgeries of all kinds are so frequent and cheap, no landed property would be safe; and some proprietors would cunningly keep back their claims until the land was increased to fifty times its original value.

With respect to the second leader of the Times, on the Competitive System of the Civil Service of India, we have not much to say. We agree with our contemporary that the system works well as far as it has gone; but it
